TRIBUTE TO THE SLAIN

The band Fox Who Slept The Day Away opened the High Hopes tribute concert at the Jubilee Auditorium on Thursday night, a commemorative and fundraising effort held in honour of the five young people who were slain at a house party in April in the worst mass killing in Calgary's history. Story, page 4. CANDICE WARD/FOR METRO

Body cameras for Calgary cops by year's end

'A picture's worth a thousand words.' Pilot program proved successful, according to deputy chief

JEREMY NOLAIS
jeremy.nolais@metronews.ca

Smile, you'll soon be on candid camera.

That's the word from Calgary police, who have now set an end-of-year target to have every frontline officer equipped with a body-worn camera.

The technology was tested through much of 2012 and 2013, and footage obtained during the police pilot program was used as evidence in 32 criminal cases ranging from traffic-related incidents to high-profile homicide investigations, according to Deputy Police Chief Trevor Daroux.

In all, 2,700 videos were logged during the pilot, he said.

"It speaks to that old adage — a picture's worth a thousand words," Daroux said, adding, "It allows the opportunity to capture, in real-time, what's occurring.

"Our frontline members are well aware and used to having everything they do captured on video anyway."

The service has narrowed in on two potential providers for their camera of choice, Daroux said, adding a total budget for the initiative was still being worked through.

Daroux said the expectation of his men will be to hit the record button anytime they're dealing with citizens.

He said the technology wouldn't replace long-standing practices of officers taking notes and obtaining written witness statements.

But he said even being able to see the mannerisms of a person speaking to an officer can prove beneficial in an investigation or when it comes time for a member to testify in court.

"What the courts are demanding is the best evidence, so you are seeing a move to more agencies using this," he said, "but all with the caution that the video will show a point in time. It doesn't show everything in its entirety."

Fewer fires, more medical calls for firefighters: Report

Changing role? City councillors to review fire department's 2013 operations on Friday

ROBSON FLETCHER
robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

Calgary firefighters are battling fewer actual fires and providing more medical assistance, according to a city report, prompting some councillors to call for a rethink of the way emergency dispatch is operated — and funded.

The number of medical assists the Calgary Fire Department provides has been growing steadily for years, and in 2013, for the first time, they made up the majority of major incidents to which firefighters responded.

Just over half, 50.1 per cent, of 55,804 incidents were classified as medical assists, according to the fire department's 2013 annual report, which will be presented to the city's community and protective services committee Friday.

"As it stands now, the fire department are our first responders at many traumatic events," said Coun. Shane Keating, one of the committee members.

Even adjusting for population growth, the trends have been clear.

The number of medical assists per 100,000 residents has increased by 22 per cent since 2009, while the number of actual fires (not counting explosions, investigations and false alarms) is down 19 per cent.

Keating said the numbers should prompt a reconsideration of emergency responses.

"If we have a fire truck out looking after a medical emergency in a house, is that the best deployment?" he said. "I think those are things we have to look at, now that you see the data."

Coun. Andre Chabot said it's not just the types of emergency calls that are changing but the way those calls come in too.

Most calls now come from mobile phones, Chabot said, and plans are underway to enable more Calgarians to contact 911 via text message in the future.

Currently the service is only available to those with hearing and speech impairments.

"The complexity of the cellphone 911 calls are a lot more demanding and costly from a resource perspective," Chabot said.

The monthly 44-cent fee recently added to Alberta cellphone bills for 911 service may not be enough to cover the increased expenses, he added.

"We had better be able to respond to the increasing operational costs of having to respond to some of those newage kind of nuances associated with 911," Chabot said.

Calgary fire Chief Ken Uzeloc and public information officer Carol Henke declined interview requests this week.

High Hopes as victims of mass killing honoured with concert

Jubilee Auditorium. Family members of those killed at Brentwood party want musical tribute to be an annual event

JEREMY NOLAIS
jeremy.nolais@metronews.ca

We just don't want any of these kids to be forgotten.

It was that sentiment from Kam Laraway, stepmother to Kaiti Perras, that set the tone for a musical tribute Thursday for the victims of Calgary's worst mass killing.

On April 15, Perras, Joshua Hunter, Zackariah Rathwell, Lawrence Hong and Jordan Segura were all stabbed to death at a Brentwood house party.

It was a crime that rocked the city, and many family members have pledged to attend each and every court date for accused murderer Matthew de Grood as they continue to search for answers.

But on Thursday night, discussion of court proceedings and psychiatric evaluations took a backseat to the sometimes raucous tunes of four bands at the first High Hopes concert at the Southern Alberta Jubilee Auditorium.

Both Laraway and Shannon Miller, Kaiti's mom, said they hope the musical showcase becomes an annual tradition.

"We're never going to forget them — we know that — but it's important for others and for Calgary to know what great kids they all were and what great kids their friends were," Laraway said.

The event was organized by the charitable organization Zackariah and the Non-Profits, a clever play on the band that both Rathwell and Hunter were members of.

Among those taking the stage were Kyle Tenove and Barry Mason, the surviving members of the former Zackariah and the Prophets foursome. They closed the evening with a fifth set devoted to their fallen bandmates.

Prior to the first set, Tenove told the crowd they were all close to the victims because "we're all from Calgary."

"I hope you enjoy the show," he said in closing, before being met by thunderous cheers.

Setting up the concert was no easy task, as Tenove and Mason's pitch for a concert at the University of Calgary was initially rejected by the students' union. That group later rethought their decision, but by then the Alberta government stepped in and offered the Jubilee.

Tenove admitted even his sound check earlier Thursday was a tad nerve-wracking.

"Standing on that stage and playing through a couple of songs, honestly, it's a bit emotional because we're missing two of our best friends, whom we wrote these songs with," he said. "But, at the same time, it's a very proud moment as well, just because we know that they're with us while we play.... When it's done I'm going to be really sad."

Perras was an accomplished ballerina and had danced before the Jubilee crowd on multiple occasions.

"There are such great memories there," Miller said. "It worked out really nicely that they were able to do it at the Jube."

Victim remembered

"Her heart — for me, that's what I saw. She cared a lot about people. She would sit there and talk to you forever if she needed to.... She liked to really help people along."

Shannon Miller, describing the things she remembers most about her daughter Kaiti Perras

Fundraiser

Kyle Tenove said the fundraising goal for the High Hopes concert was $65,000. As of Thursday, he estimated that $20,000 had been raised.

- Funds have already been established for the victims of the Brentwood mass killing. The charitable arm of the Calgary Board of Education, EducationMatters, for example, has established the Kaiti Perras Love of Dance Memorial Fund. Shannon Miller, Kaiti's mother, said support for the fund has been strong.

U of C campus. Pro-Palestine forum blocked

Pro-Palestine students at the University of Calgary are speaking out after a decision by the institution to halt an on-campus forum over concerns about potential security risks.

Solidarity for Palestinian Human Rights (SPHR), a registered U of C student club, had hoped to invite 200 people to the event Friday, according to representative Ala'a Hamdan. Her group already steered efforts to draw hundreds to repeated Friday protests at city hall during the height of violence between Israel and Hamas this summer.

But one of those gatherings did turn violent July 18, as a fight broke out and at least three counter-protesters voicing support for Israel were injured. Police have since charged four men with assault in connection to the violence.

Brian Sembo, director of campus security at U of C, said that violent outbreak was a factor in the decision to halt Friday's forum.

But Hamdan repeatedly deemed the decision "unfortunate" in an interview Thursday and maintained that only a small segment of attendees to the July 18 rally were responsible for the violence.

Hamdan said SPHR is in the process of obtaining legal advice on the U of C's decision.

Meanwhile, her group has found a new venue for Friday's event: The Genesis Centre of Community Wellness in Falconridge.

City performing 'better than most' with taxi service, suggests grad student

Taxi thesis. Council committee due to debate Friday whether to add 383 more cabs to Calgary streets

Likely to the surprise of many in the inebriated late-night crowd, Calgary's taxi system hums along better than those in many other Canadian cities, says a B.C. graduate student.

But Benn Proctor, whose master's thesis for Simon Fraser University focused on assessing and reforming Vancouver's taxi industry, said livery officials shouldn't focus on comparing themselves to fellow "under-performers" across the country.

"I would characterize taxi regulation in this country as deficient, if not defunct," he said.

Proctor delved into multiple facets of the taxi industry to develop his recommendations for Vancouver's system and in the process discovered a great deal about Calgary's current service and how it stacks up.

What he found was that the local system actually "performs better than most municipalities when it comes to the metrics of availability and the price of a licence."

As an example, Proctor said the best taxi ratio in Vancouver proper exists on Friday and Saturday nights, when the owners of a specially conditioned set of licences are allowed to operate alongside those drivers in the general fleet. But even then, patrons only have 1.08 cabs available for every 1,000 residents.

In Calgary, the current ratio is 1.27 taxis per 1,000, and that's before debate begins at a city committee meeting Friday on whether an additional 383 plates should be approved — a move that would bring the city's total fleet to 1,909.

In addition, the general consensus is that the average cost of a regular-vehicle taxi plate being sold in Calgary — those issued more recently are non-transferable — still hovers around $80,000 to $100,000.

In Vancouver, meanwhile, Proctor said plates can run as high as $800,000. Even in Regina, it takes a cool quarter-million dollars to get into the cab game, he said.

But Proctor, who lived in Calgary between 2010-12 and hailed many cabs during that time, said the city still has a long way to go and sticking by outdated regulations does little for those people waiting hours at the roadside for a ride home on weekend nights.

He said municipalities need to embrace new platforms like Uber, noting that even in the three Canadian cities where the e-hail app is operating — Halifax, Montreal and Toronto — it's doing so under a strict set of rules.

"Right now the taxi regulations and limo regulations are not open for business," he said.

POPPY PLAZA NO PLACE FOR POPPING OLLIES

IN DEFENCE OF Mike Morrison
calgary@metronews.ca

Damage at Poppy Plaza, believed to be from regular skateboarding at the new war memorial. MIKE MORRISON/FOR METRO

When I was a kid, my family always called me a tattletale.

I told them I was just preparing myself to be a columnist: "I report what I see."

But this week I felt a little bit like a 32-year-old tattletale when I tweeted Ward 7 Coun. Druh Farrell new photos of Poppy Plaza, which has now been damaged by skateboarders who visit the park on a daily basis.

Since opening last summer, the Poppy Plaza — a component of the $31.5-million redevelopment plan along Memorial Drive known as the Landscape of Memory, which commemorates citizens who have preserved our freedom and security — has become a regular stop for skateboarders in and around the area. Now, I'm not against skateboarding. As a cyclist who's regularly ostracized by certain city councillors, I can only imagine being a skateboarder is 10 times worse.

But I do take issue with skateboarding when it damages a war memorial. To me, it seems unfathomable that people can dismiss the park's significance because of their chosen hobby.

Zev Klymochko, founder of the Calgary Association of Skateboarding Enthusiasts (CASE), calls Poppy Plaza an unintentional "paradise for skateboarders" and argues that he sees all types of people enjoying recreation in the park, "from children riding their bikes over the 'obstacles' to adults in-line skating through the park." He adds: "So where do we draw the line as to what's OK and what's not OK to do in Poppy Plaza?"

Klymochko says many of his peers think that veterans would believe skateboarders are exercising their freedom as Canadians.

"Not so," said Farrell, who tweeted earlier this week. "Poppy Plaza is a war memorial & I don't see skateboarding in its future."

And while I've written before that Poppy Plaza isn't the most appealing park in terms of comfort, at the end of the day it's a war memorial. No matter how enticing it might be for certain activities, if it's damaging the park then the perpetrators need to move on. Someone has to ultimately pay for the repairs — why should it be the city?

Of course, I don't want to paint all skateboarders as "war-memorial-damaging punks," but it's definitely frustrating to see a video on CASE's website featuring skateboarders doing tricks on Poppy Plaza. Fine, use it if you think you're justified, but to flaunt it by making a video and posting it? I'm not too sure about that one.

Farrell hopes that skateboarders in Poppy Plaza will become less of an issue once a restaurant occupies the park's sole building. The city has also adopted a Skateboard Amenities Strategy, with the City of Calgary committing to developing three skate parks by year's end and another five skate parks in 2015. Klymochko believes these parks will help our skateboarding infrastructure catch up with that of other cities.

The plans for the parks look really cool, so hopefully that will give skateboarders enough places to board and they'll leave Poppy Plaza alone.

And, who knows, maybe I'll even give skateboarding a try…

Mike Morrison writes Mike's Bloggity Blog and tweets from @mikesbloggity

"We're not in the business of *#%&ing golf courses."

That's what a Calgary City Councillor said recently.
And in a way, he's right: City Council isn't a business, and it's not about making money.

But it is about making sure Calgary families have the services they need, including public recreation facilities — like swimming pools, playgrounds, sports fields… and golf courses.

Why put them at risk with privatization? In an expensive city like Calgary, people need public golf courses — to give us an affordable option for the game we love.

That's why we hope you'll join us, and support keeping Calgary's great recreational facilities public, affordable and accountable.

Third year. It takes many different kinds of people to put on Mini Maker Faire

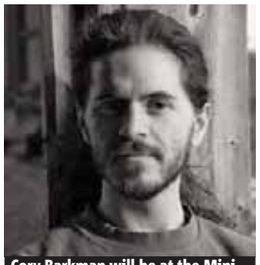

Pedal-powered ice-cream makers, 10-year-old children who build robots and a giant Tesla coil are just three of the amazing attractions at this year's Mini Maker Faire this weekend at TELUS Spark.

This is the third annual Mini Maker Faire in Calgary and will showcase the creativity and ingenuity of the maker movement in the city.

Artist Cory Barkman will be displaying his handmade functional creations this weekend as a first-timer.

"The maker movement is new to me," said Barkman. "Anyone who makes anything could be a maker, simply because we make things."

Barkman is a self-taught artist who has been working at it professionally for 10 years and creates high-end, one-of-a-kind functional art for the home, including his space probe coffee table.

Cory Barkman will be at the Mini Maker Faire. CONTRIBUTED

This year, the event welcomes special guests Evan Booth, Medhi Sadaghdar and EepyBird, the maker of the massive Diet Coke and Mentos experiments.

The Mini Maker Faire takes place at TELUS Spark on Sept. 6 and 7, and tickets can be bought online or at the door.

GSK. Province will have enough flu vaccine despite problems: Alberta Health

Alberta Health said it's not expecting a shortage of influenza vaccines come flu season after the country's largest manufacturer of the shot reported a shortfall of two million doses.

On Thursday, drug manufacturer GlaxoSmithKline Inc. (GSK) announced that problems at its Ste. Foy, Que., plant will impact its 2014-2015 influenza vaccine supply by about one third. The company was slated to supply 53 per cent of the vaccine ordered by provincial, territorial and federal governments.

Despite the impending shortage from GSK, a spokesperson from Alberta Health said the province has ordered 2.1 million units of the vaccine — enough to immunize 45 per cent of Albertans.

"The federal government has already approached manufacturers to provide additional doses," said Tim Wilson of Alberta Health in an email. "They have secured enough to fulfil 98 per cent of the orders placed by provinces and territories."

The first shipment is expected to arrive before flu season starts. LEAH GERMAIN/METRO, WITH FILES FROM THE CANADIAN PRESS

Healing hopes after PC leadership campaign

Votes begin Friday. 'We will come together. We'll heal. It's a normal part of the process,' says Premier Dave Hancock

Alberta Premier Dave Hancock says the Progressive Conservative caucus will find a way to reunite after a leadership campaign marred by leaked documents and angry accusations.

"It is disappointing when you see people engaging in things which are not helpful to the discussion of public policy and not helpful to the healing process afterwards," Hancock said Thursday. "(But) we will come together. We'll heal. It's a normal part of the process."

Hancock's days as premier are winding down.

Party members begin voting Friday for one of three candidates to become the next leader and premier.

The first round of balloting will be announced Saturday night. If none of the candidates — Jim Prentice, Ric McIver or Thomas Lukaszuk — wins a majority, the top two finishers move to a final run-off vote on Sept. 20.

The race began after Alison Redford quit as premier in March amid escalating revelations of reckless and lavish spending on travel and office perks for herself and her inner circle.

Hancock, a veteran Edmonton MLA and advanced education minister, was selected by the PC caucus to head the government during the leadership race.

Soon-to-be-outgoing Alberta premier Dave Hancock believes his party will reunite after the leadership race, despite the accusation-filled campaigns. THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Not helpful

"It is disappointing when you see people engaging in things which are not helpful to the discussion of public policy and not helpful to the healing process afterwards." Alberta Premier Dave Hancock, on the PC leadership campaign

He said he was picked to right the ship and help the government remain focused through the turbulent period.

"That was what I was asked to do, to refocus on the things that matter and to clean up the things that needed to be cleaned up. For the most part I think we've accomplished that," he said.

"I hope we're ready to turn it over now to a new leader and a new premier who will be able to really focus on market access (for exports), on environmental sustainability (and) on the things that really make a difference to the long-term prospects of this province and its people."

Emails hint at a different reason top CBE executive's contract was made public

'We don't have anything to hide.' Communications officer says media coverage of contract was 'just another shot' at an exec

JEREMY NOLAIS
jeremy.nolais@metronews.ca

CBE trustee chair Joy Bowen-Eyre has maintained the CBE was "proactive" in publicizing the contract for its top executive.
METRO FILE

Calgary's top public-school trustee and a leading communications official have deemed the release of a top executive's contract "proactive" and "routine," but a critic says obtained emails paint a different picture.

On July 9, the Calgary Board of Education quietly published the contract for Chief Supt. David Stevenson online. The move came just one day before the organization was due to report back on a freedom of information request put forward by Metro, seeking the employment agreement.

Stevenson was officially appointed the organization's top dog in early June. The contract released later indicates he stands to earn $295,000 in base pay annually as well as a car allowance of $15,000 and a development fund of $5,000.

If he resigns, retires or is fired, Stevenson also stands to net a "retiring allowance," equivalent to another full year's pay.

The CBE is required to report the earnings of its top official annually in its November audited financial statements, but such allowance is not typically included in the statements.

The CBE never publicized the contract of former top executive Naomi Johnson, but Metro did obtain and publish a leaked copy of it last December.

Still, trustee chair Joy Bowen-Eyre deflected questions on July 10 about whether the freedom of information request submitted by Metro prompted the board to publish the contract, instead describing it as a "proactive move."

"We don't have anything to hide," she said at the time.

But in emails obtained through a second freedom of information request, CBE chief communications officer Bill Brunton and others discuss keeping the organization's co-ordinator of such requests, Cathy Evanochko, in the loop as they published the agreement, so she "can respond appropriately to the FOIP request."

Brunton, discussing a request by Metro for the terms of the retirement allowance granted to Stevenson, also wrote in an email, that "I would rather have him (the reporter) report a truth, than be seen as stonewalling or withholding information that would ultimately have to be released under FOIP anyway. We had to post the contract, we would probably have to release this info too."

Larry Leach of the Association for Responsive Trusteeship in Calgary Schools said it's clear to him the board's hand was forced.

"There were some statements there (in the emails) that indicate that," he said. "It's very disturbing. If it's public information, then it's public information and it should be put out there. It also disturbs me that the people that represent the public are not involved in this conversation at all … the lack of respect for our elected officials — our public link to the Calgary Board of Education — is very troubling."

An interview with Bowen-Eyre was requested this week to clarify her comments in July, but the board instead required questions to be submitted via email.

A provided response read: "The board of trustees was not involved in the decision to publish the Chief Superintendent's contract; thus chair Bowen-Eyre will not offer additional comments on that process. This was an administrative decision made by Chief Superintendent Stevenson. In the past, the Chief Superintendent's compensation was not released until the November financial statements. In this case, the Chief Superintendent took time to receive legal and other counsel regarding the publication of his contract, and it was released when the public nature of his contract was confirmed."

In July, Bowen-Eyre said, "We have posted it … it's David's contract. It's for him to decide whether to post it. We, as an organization, have decided to post it."

But Brunton is seen in the obtained emails telling officials to hold off on publication of the agreement until he informed the board.

A leaked email to trustees July 9 indicates he did just that, telling the seven elected members, "We are approaching this as a routine matter of public disclosure and will not be making an announcement."

'Just another shot'?

'Nothing controversial'

The Calgary Board of Education's top communications official informed the organization's top executive that media coverage of the release of his contract would amount to "just another shot at a competitively paid public sector executive."

Bill Brunton, the CBE's chief communications officer, told Chief Supt. David Stevenson on July 19, as Metro was awaiting an interview on his contract, not to worry about extensive fallout from the public release of his $315,000 compensation package and employment terms.

"Because there is nothing controversial in your contract, I expect this to be a one-day news cycle," Brunton wrote. "Just another shot at a competitively paid public sector executive."

Alberta Education Minister Jeff Johnson, however, had previously raised concerns about the amount of compensation being paid out to urban school board superintendents.

"My concern is when you have superintendents making more than the deputy minister, the minister, the premier," Johnson told Metro on July 20. "That warrants a real close look, especially in light of all the other constraints and the teachers taking zeros. I hope that boards keep that in mind when they're setting their wages for executives."

Coral Springs attack. Police release sketch of sexual-assault suspect

Police have released a sketch of a suspect in a sex assault earlier this week in northeast Calgary.

Police are still looking for two male suspects after a woman was struck in the head and sexually assaulted early Monday in Coral Springs.

They've released the image of a man described as white, in his 40s to 50s, about five-foot-11 and 190 pounds, with "grey, very short brush-cut hair" that is "not a flat-top" and blue eyes. He was seen wearing jeans, a blue denim jacket and white running shoes. METRO

Suspicious death. Mom charged after girl's body discovered in vehicle

Mounties have laid charges against the mother of a child whose remains were found in a vehicle in west-central Alberta.

Laura Coward, 47, is charged with abduction in contravention of a custody order and one count of break-and-enter and theft of a holiday trailer.

RCMP spokeswoman Cpl. Sharon Franks said Thursday that the girl's death is suspicious and more charges could be laid.

An autopsy has yet to be performed on the remains of nine-year-old Amber Lucius.

Franks said the girl's family has consented to the release of her name and asked the media for privacy.

Coward most recently lived in Millet. She and the girl's father had been in court over her custody, Franks said.

Woman found dead in car was murdered: Cops

Crime. One man charged, but police are still looking to talk with more people

Kathy Lynn Reid, found dead inside a truck Wednesday, was murdered, Calgary police said Thursday.

The 37-year-old died as a result of asphyxiation consistent with strangulation, according to an autopsy report.

James Edward Kruse, 36, has been charged with first-degree murder.

Investigators believe Reid and Kruse drove around southeast Calgary as well as outside of the city on Tuesday night.

It's alleged the two had some sort of disagreement while in a rural area northeast of the city and that the accused physically assaulted Reid, killing her.

He then drove back into the city and waited a few hours before calling police early Wednesday, investigators said.

Sgt. Doug Andrus said the victim and the accused had known each other for a few months and had a "casual relationship."

He also said the police are currently looking into anyone else who could be connected.

"We do know that they were in contact with several people during the course that they were together," said Andrus. "We're in the process of identifying those people and speaking with them."

So far, Kruse has co-operated with investigators, Andrus said.

He is currently in police custody and will make his next court appearance on Sept. 18.

Anyone with information is asked to call police at 403-266-1234 or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-8477.

Blind student successfully crowdfunds tuition

It only took three days and a lot of generous support from strangers to make Ashley King's goal of crowdfunding her tuition a reality.

King lost her vision when she was poisoned with methanol on a trip to Bali but has decided not to let that stop her from achieving her educational goals.

Ashley King METRO FILE

As Metro reported Tuesday, King had just launched her crowdfunding RCKTSHP campaign and, by Thursday morning, Calgary radio station CJAY 92 surprised her by topping up her account with the remaining $5,000 toward her $8,000 goal.

"Now I have to do well in school," she said. "I am not just doing this for myself anymore; there are a lot of people supporting me."

The donation was made by CJAY 92's weekly wish fund.

"This was just an opportunity to help someone and give them a happy ending," said Ross MacLeod, program director for the station.

While King has reached her goal, her campaign will run on RCKTSHP for the rest of the month. Any extra funds exceeding the $8,000 will be donated to the CNIB.

Comic Joan Rivers dead at 81

Got her start at local clubs in New York. In 1965, she landed her big break on The Tonight Show

Joan Rivers, the raucous, acid-tongued comedian who crashed the male-dominated realm of late-night talk shows and turned Hollywood red carpets into danger zones for badly dressed celebrities, died Thursday. She was 81.

Rivers was hospitalized last week after she went into cardiac arrest at a Manhattan doctor's office following a routine procedure. Daughter Melissa Rivers said she died at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York, surrounded by family and close friends.

"My mother's greatest joy in life was to make people laugh," Melissa Rivers said. "Although that is difficult to do right now, I know her final wish would be that we return to laughing soon."

Rivers, who made "Can we talk?" a trademark of her routines, never mellowed during her half-century-long career. She had insults ready for all races, genders and creeds. She moved from longtime targets such as the weight problems of Elizabeth Taylor, of whom she said "her favourite food is seconds," to newer foes such as Miley Cyrus, and continued to appear on stage and on TV as an octogenarian.

Comedy was not only her calling but her therapy, as she turned her life inside out for laughs, mocking everything from her proclaimed lack of sex appeal ("My best birth control now is just to leave the lights on") to her own mortality.

"I have never wanted to be a day less than I am," she insisted in a 2013 interview with The Associated Press. "People say, 'I wish I were 30 again.' Nahhh! I'm very happy HERE. It's great. It gets better and better. And then, of course, we die," she quipped. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Coffee plants mutated to have caffeine: Study

Scientists have woken up and smelled the coffee — and analyzed its DNA.

They found that what we love about coffee — the caffeine — is a genetic quirk, not related to the caffeine in chocolate or tea.

"It's an accident that has been frozen in place very likely by the influence of natural selection," says University of Buffalo evolutionary biologist Victor Albert. He and more than 60 other researchers from around the world mapped out the genetic instruction book of java. Their results were published Thursday in the journal Science.

Albert says researchers discovered that caffeine developed separately in coffee, tea and chocolate because it is in different genes in different areas of plants' genomes. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Flu vaccine supply to fall short by 2 million

GSK. Canada's largest source will be unable to fill about 30% of its 2014-15 commitment

GSK, Canada's largest flu vaccine supplier, won't be able to fill about 30 per cent of its Canadian order for the upcoming 2014-15 flu season, the company said Thursday.

It also suggested the problems at its production facility in Ste. Foy, Que., may have an impact on its ability to supply vaccine to the U.S. market from that plant this season.

GlaxoSmithKline, which now goes by the name GSK, said problems in this year's production run have left it with a shortfall of about two million doses. The company was slated to provide nearly 6.4 million doses, 53 per cent of Canada's total purchase of about 12 million doses.

The Public Health Agency of Canada said it has secured 1.2 million additional doses of vaccine from other manufacturers which have a portion of the country's flu vaccine supply contract. Those companies are Sanofi Pasteur, Novartis and MedImmune, which is owned by AstraZeneca.

The Public Health Agency's statement, sent via email, suggested there may be delays in the delivery of the portion of the GSK contract that the company still believes it can fill.

"A new delivery schedule for the flu vaccine from GSK is still being determined but it is expected that deliveries will start in the second or third week of October, long before flu immunization demand reaches its peak," it said.

The company that makes much of Canada's annual flu vaccine and has the country's pandemic flu vaccine contract has been issued a warning by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. JACQUES BOISSINOT/THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

GSK said in an email that the production problem was unrelated to the concerns raised earlier this year in inspections by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and Health Canada.

The two-million-dose shortfall represents just under 17 per cent of Canada's total vaccine purchase for this year.

The news comes as provinces and territories are gearing up to start flu vaccination programs beginning next month.

Warning letter

FDA found a variety of problems

The FDA had issued a warning letter after it found a variety of problems in an inspection, stemming from bacterial contamination in the plant's water supply.

The company said it identified irregular results in its routine quality control monitoring on Aug. 14 and suspended production to investigate and try to fix the problem. Production was reinstated on Aug. 26 but it will result in a delivery delay, the company said.

It also said it had "an invalid test result" on one component of the vaccine, which protects against three different strains of influenza.

Canada leading push for 'flushable wipes' standard

Canada is leading an international work group to come up with an industry-wide standard for so-called flushable wipes as waste-water experts in North America and beyond blame the personal towelettes for a host of sewage system problems.

Barry Orr, a waste-water official in London, Ont., is among the Canadians leading the Geneva-based International Standards Organization's efforts to develop the standard.

Raw numbers

20,000

Last month, officials in the Minnesota town of Cambridge said they suspected personal wipes were the culprit after 20,000 gallons of raw sewage spilled into a river after a backup at a waste-water treatment facility.

Orr is currently developing tests that will determine the flushability of a barrage of products on the market that declare themselves sewer- and septic-safe.

"Canada is at the forefront in addressing the flushability of these products," Orr, who has been raising alarm bells about the products for years, said in a recent interview.

"We're leading the ISO, and we're working with nations across the globe to make improvements."

Flushable wipes are a multibillion-dollar business.

But from Louisiana to southwestern Ontario and rural England, plumbers and waste-water experts say the pre-moistened wipes, branded as a cleaner alternative to toilet paper, are taking a terrible toll on residential pipes and municipal sewage systems, causing major clogs and sewer backups. Brazil's successful breast milk banks a model for curbing infant mortality

Free milk. Brazilian network transformed to meet the needs of a developing country

In this Aug. 27 photo, a lab technician shows containers of frozen human milk at the Fernandes Figueira Institute in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. SILVIA IZQUIERDO/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thirty years ago, poor Brazilian women were paid to give away their breast milk, leaving their children at risk of malnourishment. Equipment at the few milk-collection centres that existed was so costly it limited the country's ability to expand the program's reach.

That has changed dramatically, thanks in part to Joao Aprigio Guerra de Almeida, a chemist who has turned the Brazilian Milk Bank Network into a model studied by other countries and credited with helping slash infant mortality by two-thirds.

"Brazil is really the world leader in milk-bank development," said Dr. Lisa Hammer, a University of Michigan pediatrician who was part of a team visiting the Rio de Janeiro-based network last week.

Relatively rare in much of the world, breast milk donation is common in Brazil, where the network of banks works in much the same way as blood banks — testing, sorting and storing milk used mostly to feed premature infants in neonatal units.

When a mother is unable to breastfeed her baby, due to illness, drug addiction or other problems, the network also steps in to offer free milk.

Reaching such success was not easy. Almeida recalled the trouble he saw on his first visit to a Rio milk bank in 1985, at the tail end of the country's two-decade-long military dictatorship. The system relied on "donations" from destitute mothers who often sold so much breast milk they were left without enough for their own infants.

Almeida lobbied for a ban on the sale of breast milk and sought alternatives to expensive imported equipment. High-end pasteurizing machines that cost $25,000 were swapped for $1,500 Brazilian-made machines used in food-testing laboratories.

"We found ways of adapting the system to the reality of a developing country, without compromising the quality and safety of the milk," said Almeida, 57. "We also shifted the focus from the child to the mother, making her into the protagonist."

Brazilian women increasingly are choosing to nurse, with the Health Ministry estimating more than half of mothers now breastfeed exclusively for their children's first six months of life. In the United States, that rate is 16.4 per cent, according to the Centers for Disease Control, even though breastfeeding is widely seen as the best source of nutrition for infants.

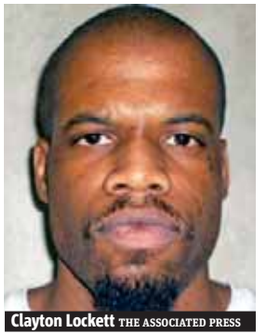

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Analysis

The benefits of breast milk

Breast milk contains antimicrobial and anti-inflammatory substances that help prevent ailments such as diarrhea, which can be fatal to infants, and to promote long-term health in ways that dairy-based formulas do not. Use of breast milk also allows mothers to avoid using potentially contaminated water when they prepare formula. Since 1985, Brazil's infant mortality rate has plummeted from 63.2 per 1,000 births to 19.6 in 2013.

Oklahoma set to release findings on execution

Clayton Lockett THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Investigators are set to release their findings after looking into the execution of an inmate in Oklahoma who writhed, moaned and clenched his teeth on a gurney upon being injected with three lethal drugs.

Gov. Mary Fallin ordered the state Department of Public Safety to investigate the April 29 execution of Clayton Lockett and recommend possible procedural changes. The agency has said it would release its report Thursday morning.

State prisons director Robert Patton halted Lockett's execution as the man struggled against restraints in the death chamber. Lockett died behind a shuttered curtain 43 minutes after his execution began, and Patton said the cause was a heart attack. But autopsy results released last week said he died from the drugs: midazolam, vecuronium bromide and potassium chloride. The report did not explain why the execution took so long or why Lockett writhed.

Lockett, 38, had been convicted of shooting Stephanie Nieman, 19, with a sawed-off shotgun and watching as two accomplices buried her alive in 1999.

His execution was the first time Oklahoma had used midazolam, a sedative. An Ohio inmate given the same drug also gasped and appeared in distress before dying in January, and an Arizona inmate who received it in July struggled to breathe for nearly two hours before dying.

Drugmakers in recent years have objected to states using their products in executions, so Oklahoma and others have had to find alternative sources. Some states turn to loosely regulated compounding pharmacies that custom-make medications.

After Lockett's death and pending the Department of Public Safety's report, all Oklahoma executions were postponed for six months. Three executions have been set for November and December.

Legal action

A June lawsuit against the Oklahoma Department of Corrections on behalf of 21 prisoners alleged that prison officials are experimenting on death row inmates and violating the U.S. Constitution's ban on cruel and unusual punishment by tinkering with the state's lethal injection procedures.

CRTC report

Less channel surfing, more TV watching

Canadians spent a little less time channel-surfing last year but still watched more TV content overall when accounting for streaming, suggests a report by the CRTC.

The average Canadian aged two or older watched 27.9 hours of TV a week in 2013 — or about four hours nightly — which was down by about 20 minutes from 2012, according to the 2014 Communications Monitoring Report. The average adult streamed 1.9 hours of TV content in 2013, which was up about 45 per cent over the previous year.

Over 40 per cent of Canadians said they watched TV over the Internet in 2013.

While many chose to cut the cord in 2013 and go without a TV subscription, they still made up a small minority. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Google to refund $19M for purchases made by children

Google has agreed to pay full refunds totalling at least $19 million to consumers who were charged for purchases that children made via apps, without parental consent, from the Google Play app store.

The settlement is part of the third case by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) about unauthorized in-app purchases made by children.

The FTC settled with Apple for $32.5 million in January and it has filed a complaint against Amazon.

In Google's case, the FTC said that since 2011, consumers have reported children making unauthorized purchases ranging from 99 cents to $200, within kids' apps downloaded from the Google Play store. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ex-first lady depicts French president as cruel, dishonest

New book published. Valerie Trierweiler says Francois Hollande, of the Socialist Party, 'doesn't like the poor'

Valerie Trierweiler, France's first lady until earlier this year, paints a harsh portrait of her former partner, the deeply unpopular President Francois Hollande, in her new book.

Being described as a mean liar who perpetuates a "cycle of infidelity" and doesn't like the poor surely can't help the image of the Socialist leader.

The couple broke up in January amid reports Hollande was having an affair with French actress Julie Gayet, which he did not deny.

In her 320-page book published Thursday, titled Thank You for This Moment, Trierweiler describes her relationship with Hollande in biting detail, from their first kiss to their breakup after the Gayet affair emerged.

Hollande's office declined to comment.

According to Trierweiler, the relationship was born of infidelity and died from it.

They almost tied the knot: Trierweiler wrote that he proposed in September 2012 and they planned a private wedding just before Christmas. With about a month to go, Hollande abruptly called off those plans, she wrote.

"Julie Gayet was already in his life, but I didn't know," wrote Trierweiler, a longtime journalist with Paris Match magazine.

When Trierweiler fell in love with Hollande, the mother of three was married, and he was the longtime partner of Segolene Royal, also a Socialist politician, and father of their four children. Hollande and Royal split in 2007, two years after his affair with Trierweiler began. Trierweiler lamented that she has been seen by many as the destroyer of the "mythic couple" of French politics.

Trierweiler wrote that she discovered his tryst with Gayet just days before gossip magazine Closer published photos of him reportedly going to a secret rendezvous with the actress. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hypocritical?

Somewhat unexpectedly for a politician who quipped about his dislike of the rich, Hollande "doesn't like the poor," writes Trierweiler.

- Royal defended Hollande Thursday, telling BFM-TV that he was an ardent defender of the poor while he was a regional governor.

Teens riot at Nashville juvenile jail

String of incidents. Just two days after mass escape, violence breaks out at troubled facility

Teenagers try to break into a building at Woodland Hills Youth Development Center in Nashville, Tenn., Thursday. JASON S. LEE /THE TENNESSEAN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

At a detention centre in Nashville, Tenn., with a long history of violence, escape attempts and sexual-abuse allegations, more than two dozen teens broke out of a common area and created a large disturbance in the yard Wednesday night, roaming the area with sticks and spraying a fire extinguisher.

Officials said two staff members suffered minor injuries at Woodland Hills Youth Development Center, where just two days earlier, 32 teens escaped after finding a weak spot in the fence surrounding the yard. Six remained at large Thursday.

On Wednesday night, about 28 teens — some of whom were part of the breakout — kicked out metal panels underneath the windows in a common area to reach the yard. This time, police formed a ring around the centre's perimeter fence to try to prevent another escape.

Video shot by Nashville station WTVF showed teens chasing and assaulting a man who appeared to be a staff member. Photos in The Tennessean newspaper showed teens in the detention centre yard carrying sticks. One showed someone spraying a fire extinguisher.

Ten ringleaders were identified and brought to another detention centre, Tennessee Department of Children's Services spokesman Rob Johnson said. The rest were returned to their dorms.

This week's incidents are the latest in a string of troubles for the facility, where most of the 14- to 19-year-olds have committed at least three felonies. The centre saw a spike in assaults in 2012 after the state placed older teenagers there from a shuttered facility in eastern Tennessee. Between July and September that year, police had to be called at least 47 times for assistance, which surpassed total police visits for the previous two years combined.

In 2010, the U.S. Department of Justice ranked Woodland Hills as 13th in America among juvenile facilities with reports of sexual abuse by staffers.

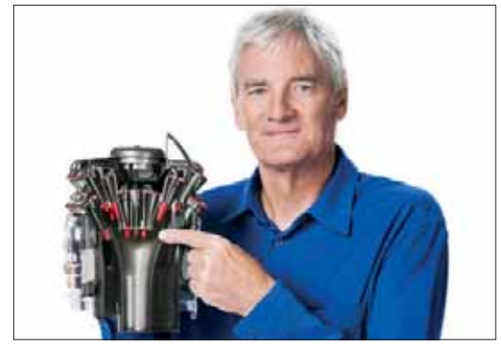

In a 2004 breakout attempt, more than a dozen teens armed with broom handles and hurling bricks injured 16 staffers before they were dispersed by police in riot gear.

The Department of Children's Services will review policy for all three of the state's juvenile detention centres, Commissioner Jim Henry said. It's difficult for staff to maintain control when the teens can open doors to enter common areas, he said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nevada. Tesla Motors selects site for $5-billion electric car battery factory

To bring electric cars to the masses, Tesla Motors will use an expanse of desert where wild mustangs still roam for a factory that the company projects will crank out enough batteries to power 500,000 vehicles annually by decade's end.

Tesla chose Nevada as the site for the $5-billion facility, a person familiar with car maker's plans said Wednesday.

Nevada's elected leaders still must deliver on the economic incentives they've promised, but if they do as expected, Tesla will open its massive factory at an industrial park outside Reno, according to the person, who spoke on condition of anonymity because no official announcement had been made. An announcement was scheduled for Thursday afternoon at Nevada's Capitol.

A state synonymous with gambling hit the jobs jackpot — Tesla has said the factory will employ about 6,500 people. That's a welcome jolt for a tourism-based economy particularly hard-hit during the Great Recession. Tesla's choice of Nevada over California, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico takes it a big step closer to mass producing an electric car that costs around $35,000 and can go 200 miles on a single charge.

The "gigafactory," as Tesla calls the project, would bring the cost of batteries down by producing them on a huge scale. Its approximately 10 million square feet, equivalent to about 174 football fields, would be running by 2017, which is when Tesla hopes to introduce its Model 3.

13 suffer acid burns after chemical flash

A routine experiment designed to help children understand tornadoes erupted in a chemical flash at a Nevada museum, injuring 13, including children who suffered acid burns on their hands, arms and faces.

Emergency crews responded to a report of a possible explosion at 4:10 p.m. Wednesday at the Terry Lee Wells Discovery Museum in downtown Reno.

City of Reno spokesman Matthew Brown said that a preliminary investigation indicates it was not an explosion but a chemical flash, which is "similar to if someone threw gasoline on a fire." Eight children and one adult were transported to a Reno hospital for minor burns or smoke inhalation, Brown said.

U.S. Justice Dept. to probe Ferguson police practices

Michael Brown. Inquiry separate from an ongoing civil rights investigation into the shooting of an unarmed black teenager

The U.S. Justice Department could open a wide-ranging investigation into the practices of the Ferguson, Mo., Police Department as early as Thursday, following the shooting last month of an unarmed black 18-year-old by a white police officer in the St. Louis suburb.

A person briefed on the matter said Missouri officials were notified Wednesday of the probe.

The investigation will look at the practices in the past few years of the police department, including patterns of stops, arrests and use-of-force, as well as the training the officers receive, the person said.

The inquiry is separate from an ongoing civil rights investigation the Justice Department is conducting into the shooting of Michael Brown by Officer Darren Wilson on Aug. 9.

An autopsy paid for by Brown's family concluded that he was shot six times, twice in the head.

U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder, centre, accompanied by Acting Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights Division Molly Moran, left, and Ronald Davis, director of the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS), speaks during a news conference at the Justice Department in Washington, D.C., Thursday, to announce the Justice Department's civil rights division will launch a broad civil rights investigation in the Ferguson, Mo. PABLO MARTINEZ MONSIVAIS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A local grand jury is also investigating the shooting, which set off about two weeks of unrest in the streets of Ferguson and became a flashpoint in the national discussion of police treatment of minorities across the country.

Attorney General Eric Holder two weeks ago visited the St. Louis suburb, where he met with investigators and Brown's parents and shared personal experiences of having himself been mistreated by the police.

The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the investigation, first reported by The Washington Post, had not yet been announced.

Ferguson Police Chief Tom Jackson did not immediately return a call seeking comment about the Justice Department investigation.

Police have said the shooting followed a scuffle that broke out after Wilson told Brown and a friend to move out of the street and onto a sidewalk. Police say Wilson was pushed into his squad car and physically assaulted. Some witnesses have reported seeing Brown's arms up in the air before the shooting in an act of surrender. An autopsy paid for by Brown's family concluded that he was shot six times, twice in the head.

The new investigation, though, goes far beyond the circumstances of the shooting. It will look at the actions of a police department that is predominantly white even though Ferguson is about 70 per cent black. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Halfway Rock Light Station, a 76-foot-high lighthouse off the coast of Harpswell, Maine, is one of many state-owned lighthouses up for auction. Half a dozen bidders are currently vying for the lighthouse, with the high bid presently sitting at over $240,000 US. JEREMY D'ENTREMONT/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Coast Guard continues push to sell off lighthouses

Property purge.
U.S. has transferred over 100 lighthouses in the last 14 years

Lighthouses for sale! Actually, lots of lighthouses for free. Technological advances and a desire to purge unneeded properties paved the way for the federal government to transfer more than 100 lighthouses over the last 14 years — and it intends to keep selling and giving them away.

The sold lighthouses, located on both coasts and in the Great Lakes states, have become everything from museums to bed-and-breakfasts.

Dave Waller, who purchased the Graves Island Light Station in the mouth of Boston Harbor for a record $933,888 US last year, is retrofitting the turn-of-the-century lighthouse into a private home that can double as a vacation rental.

He's trying to fashion a bedroom as far as possible from the foghorn — a challenging feat in a building with about 750 feet of space.

"It just seemed like a chance to have something a little more independent and on your own," Waller said.

Sixty-eight of the lighthouses have gone for free to preservationists, while 36 others sold at public auction thanks to the National Historic Lighthouse Preservation Act of 2000, which allows the government to dispose of federally owned lighthouses.

The Coast Guard, which has 71 other lighthouses it would like to sell, still owns 254 lighthouses and is in the process of deciding which it will keep or eventually sell.

"There is an end in sight," Gales said. "There's a limited number of lighthouses."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lighthouse sell-off!

The U.S. Coast Guard has been working to shed itself of a number of its state-owned lighthouses, and over the last 14 years has transferred more than 100 stations that have then been converted into museums, bed-and-breakfasts and homes.

- No selling target. The federal General Services Administration, which sells the lighthouses, does not have a target number of how many lighthouses it would like to sell and give away, but the Coast Guard is always looking to shed excess lighthouses that "are often no longer critical" to the guard's work, said Patrick Sclafani, a spokesman for the agency. Buyers and preservationists typically allow the Coast Guard access to the lighthouses so it can maintain the lights, all of which are automated.
- Seventy-six foot, $240,000 lighthouse in Maine. The administration is nearing the end of an online auction for the Halfway Rock Light Station off of Harpswell, Maine. The lighthouse is attracting interest, with a half-dozen bidders and a high bid of more than $240,000. That's a good figure for a lighthouse that is only accessible by boat, a feature that frequently drives bidders away, Gales said.

Canadians = conservationists?

A poll commissioned by Greenpeace suggests a clear majority of people in 30 countries want to see stronger efforts made to preserve the Arctic environment from industry expansion.

The four-question poll of over 30,000 found some of the strongest support for conservation comes from Canada.

"(Canadians) definitely have higher numbers in each category when compared to the global average," Farrah Khan, Greenpeace's Arctic campaigner, said Wednesday. "Canada's pretty high on the list."

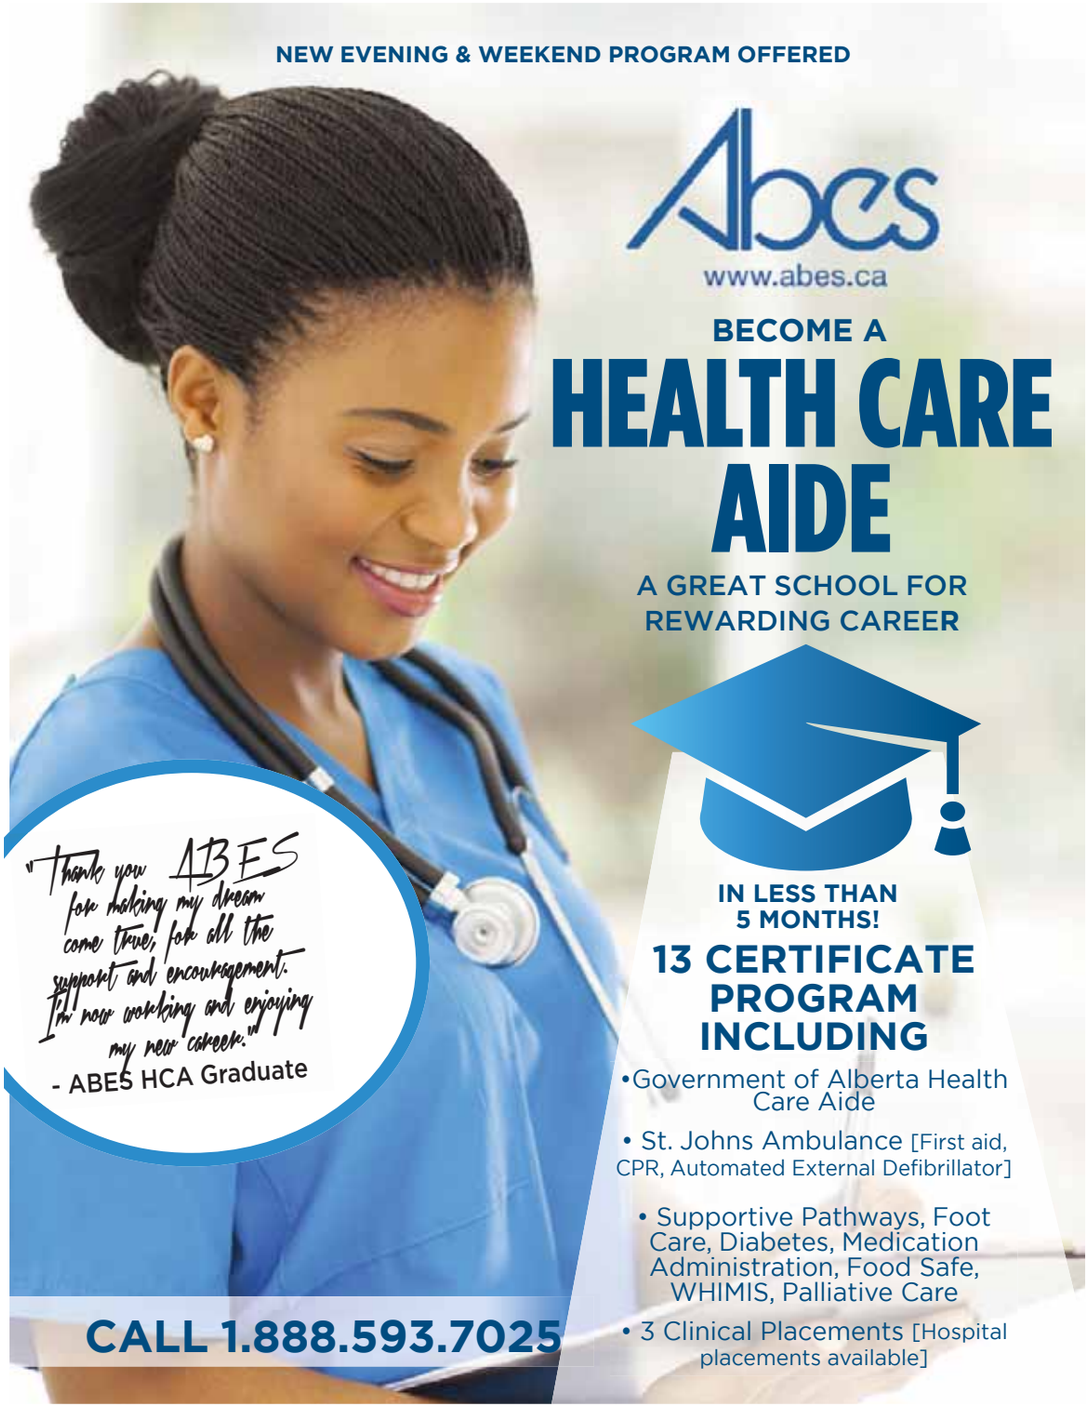

RIWI Corp. did not supply a margin of error with the poll. Industry associations limit statements about margins of sampling error for most online surveys.

They found that 75 per cent of Canadians feel the Arctic Ocean should be free from oil drilling, while 70 per cent of Canadians want oil drilling and industrial-scale fishing kept out of international waters. Seventy-eight per cent of Canadians feel a wildlife sanctuary should be built in the North Pole. Energy companies found some support, with 47 per cent believing industry is capable of cleaning up a major spill.

Khan acknowledges the uphill battle in fighting for Arctic protection when so many governments are trying to expand into the north, but he said there's a disconnect between what's happening in the Canadian Arctic, for example, and what Canadians want.

"The will of the people in Canada and in many parts of the world is that we shouldn't be drilling," said Khan.

Survivors' to Ebola

Outbreak. Unproven Ebola therapy uses antibodies from survivors' blood to combat the often deadly virus

As West Africa struggles to contain the biggest Ebola outbreak ever, some experts say an unusual but simple treatment might help: the blood of survivors.

The evidence is mixed for using infection-fighting antibodies from survivors' blood for Ebola, but without any licensed drugs or vaccines for the deadly disease, some say it's worth a shot.

"This is something that's fairly simple to do," said Dr. Peter Piot, director of London's School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine and the co-discoverer of the Ebola virus.

Using blood of survivors is one of the experimental Ebola treatments under discussion at a two-day meeting that began Thursday in Geneva. Over 200 experts assembled by the World Health Organization are looking at issues of safety and effectiveness, while considering which treatments should be prioritized for testing during the current outbreak.

Some scientists think antibodies in the blood of Ebola survivors could help patients infected with the deadly disease.

Piot said it is vital to find out if the blood treatment is effective.

"I hope this is the last Ebola outbreak where all we have is isolation, quarantine and supportive care to treat patients," he said.

blood key treatment?

Ebola blood treatment

Therapy a unique opportunity

Dr. Colin Brown, who recently worked in an Ebola clinic in Sierra Leone, said local hospitals should be able to provide survivors' blood if it's needed.

"It does give us the opportunity to try some new therapies," he said. "As long as they are not harmful, why shouldn't we try to do something?"

In contrast to ZMapp, the widely untested drug used on seven Ebola patients — two of whom died — utilizing the blood of recovered patients doesn't welcome the same complications of administering treatments, given that the drug's developer has said it will take months to make even a modest supply.

WHO's blood network, an international group of blood regulators, noted there are thousands of survivors from past Ebola outbreaks in Africa who could be tapped as a source of survivors' blood.

More than 3,000 have died from the virus, with another 20,000 expected before the outbreak is halted. Brown describes that possibility as unfortunate yet realistic.

Beyond using the blood of survivors for treatments, there are about a half-dozen medicines and vaccines in development.

Same-sex marriage

Court rules states' gay marriage bans unconstitutional

A U.S. appeals court in Chicago ruled Thursday that gay marriage bans in Wisconsin and Indiana violate the U.S. Constitution — thereby bumping the number of states where gay marriage will be legal from 19 to 21.

The unanimous decision by the three-judge panel of the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals is yet another in a series of courtroom wins for gay-marriage advocates. Since last year, the vast majority of federal rulings have declared same-sex marriage bans unconstitutional. Between the bans being struck down and the order restating them as the appeals process ran its course, hundreds of gay couple in both states rushed to marry.

Man pleads not guilty to terroristic threat charges

A Hawaii man who collects and sells fish has pleaded not guilty to a charge of terroristic threatening for allegedly pulling the air-supply regulator out of the mouth of an anti-aquarium industry activist while underwater.

Jay Lovell did not speak during a brief arraignment Tuesday. His attorney asked for a jury trial, which is set for Sept. 11.

The incident took place in May off Hawaii Island when Rene Umberger and other divers approached Lovell as he collected fish. Umberger said they approached with a video device ready to catch Lovell, but instead got footage of a collector swimming toward Umberger and ripping out her air supply regulator.

Father of Georgia toddler charged with murder

More than two months after his son's death in a hot car, a Georgia man — who prosecutors say sat in his office exchanging nude photos with women while his son languished for hours — was charged with murder on Thursday.

A Cobb County grand jury indicted Justin Ross Harris on multiple charges, including malice murder, felony murder and cruelty to children. The malice murder charge indicates that prosecutors intend to prove Harris intentionally left his son Cooper in the hot car to die.

Harris will be arraigned in the next few weeks, and Cobb County District Attorney Vic Reynolds said he will decide before then whether to seek the death penalty.

Harris has been in jail since his arrest the day his 22-month-old son died.

Harris has told police he was supposed to drive his son to daycare the morning of June 18 but drove to work without realizing that the child was strapped into a car seat in the back.

Police have said the toddler was left in the vehicle for about seven hours. The medical examiner's office has said the boy died of hyperthermia — essentially overheating — and has called his death a homicide.

Prosecutors have questioned Harris' wife, Leanna, and she has hired a criminal defence attorney, but no charges have been filed against her. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wedding bus swept away, bride and groom missing

Worst floods in 22 years. Many Kashmir ceremonies postponed as heavy rains disrupt wedding season

Kashmiri men carry a boy to safety after their neighbourhood was flooded in Srinagar, India, Thursday. At least 100 villages across the Kashmir valley were flooded as lakes and rivers overflowed as heavy rains caused the worst flooding in 22 years. DAR YASIN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A bus carrying more than 50 wedding guests was swept away Thursday by a flooded stream in the Indian-controlled portion of Kashmir and all but three of the passengers were missing, officials said. Police officer Rajesh Kumar said the three swam to safety and told rescuers that about 50 others were trapped in the bus.

Rescuers were searching for the bus but had not been able to locate it in the gushing waters. New landslides and heavy rains blocked access to the area, Kumar said.

The Press Trust of India news agency said the bride and bridegroom were among the missing people who were returning home from a wedding ceremony in a village about 180 kilometres southwest of Srinagar.

At least 18 people have died in the past two days, and authorities on Thursday closed schools and stopped train services in the Kashmir valley. Police officer Imtiyaz Hussain said the 18 victims were swept away by floodwaters or buried by mud.

At least 100 villages across the Kashmir valley were flooded by overflowing lakes and rivers, officials said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

‘Womenomics’ OK, but Japan’s PM still has to do the dishes

Akie Abe. Prime minister’s wife says women work harder than men but are not represented fairly

Japan’s first lady says she has such a busy schedule that sometimes it’s up to the prime minister to do the dishes or take out the garbage.

Despite her husband’s conservative image, she says, he does chores when he can. It’s the kind of flexibility that she says is needed for the advancement of Japanese women.

Prime Minister Shinzo Abe is pushing companies and the government to hire and promote women. He appointed five women to his 18-member cabinet on Wednesday.

His wife, Akie Abe, 52, said Thursday she is involved in a wide range of activities that keep her out all day, leaving her little time for house chores.

Even though she openly refers to herself as a member of the “opposition in the household” on some issues her husband favours, such as nuclear energy, she is a big supporter of his policy of promoting women’s advancement, which has been dubbed “womenomics.”

Akie Abe says it’s important that society allows women enough flexibility to work again after child-rearing or other life events that often interrupt their professional careers, she said.

In Japan, even highly educated women are underrepresented in senior-level positions in companies, government or universities. Women have long been discriminated against in salary and promotion in corporate Japan, and have often faced obstacles to pursuing their career due to lack of help in childcare and helpful spouses.

NATO urged to tackle ISIS threat

Summit. Britain and the U.S. are counting on the alliance to step up against the al-Qaida splinter group wreaking havoc in the Middle East

A meeting of NATO leaders convened in Britain Thursday facing no shortage of crises and a challenge from two of its dominant partners to confront a virulent new form of Islamic extremism in the Middle East.

Both U.S. President Barack Obama and British Prime Minister David Cameron called on the 28-member military alliance to deal with the emerging threat posed by the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS), an al-Qaida splinter group.

"We meet here at a solemn moment for our alliance and the security of our nations," Cameron said at the opening of the summit, being held on a rolling golf resort in the seaside Welsh community of Newport.

"We meet at a crucial time in the history of our alliance. The world faces many dangerous and evolving threats and it is absolutely clear that NATO is as vital to our future as it has been in our past."

Even the brush-fire war in eastern Ukraine and a resurgent Russia seemed to be eclipsed by the growing concern over ISIS, whose ranks of hardened fighters have been bolstered by hundreds of westerners from Britain, Canada and the United States.

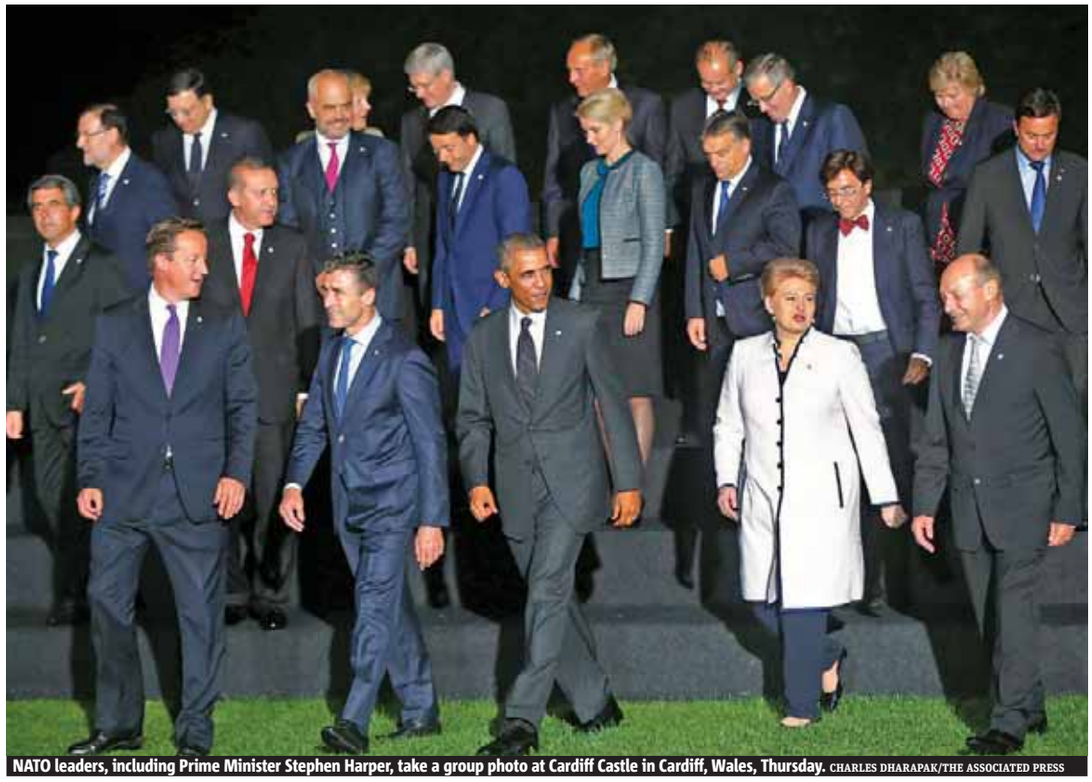

The urgency is propelled by horrific Internet images of beheaded journalists and reports of atrocities in Syria and northern Iraq, as well as the fear that foreign fighters could return home to continue their war in the West.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry convened a meeting of possible coalition partners, who could participate in an expanded bombing campaign and humanitarian relief.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who is also attending the summit, made it clear Wednesday, speaking to a British business audience, that Canada is prepared to do more as part of the international effort.

The Canadian air force is currently using two cargo planes to fly arms and ammunition into Iraq.

Sides aim for truce in Ukraine

Ukraine's government and rebels voiced hope Thursday that they were within reach of a peace deal that could spell a quick end to bloodshed in eastern Ukraine, even as NATO leaders and Ukraine's president agreed that Russia should be punished for its role in the insurgency.

Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko said he was ready to order a ceasefire in eastern Ukraine if a deal is signed at scheduled talks Friday in Minsk, Belarus. The rebels said they were ready to declare a truce if an agreement can be reached on a political settlement for the mostly Russian-speaking region.

Before flying to Wales for his meetings Thursday with NATO leaders, Poroshenko discussed the outlines of a peace deal with Russian President Vladimir Putin, and both voiced optimism about reaching agreement.

Specifics of the hoped-for peace deal have yet to be finalized. Putin has suggested that rebels halt their offensive while the Ukrainian government forces should pull back away from shelling residential areas.

By the numbers

The battles have taken a heavy toll on Ukraine's army. National Security Council spokesman Col. Andriy Lysenko said 837 Ukrainian servicemen have been killed and 3,044 wounded since the fighting began.

Poroshenko, in turn, has called for the withdrawal of foreign troops, a diplomatic reference to Russian forces, as well as establishing a buffer zone on the border and releasing all Ukrainian prisoners held in Russia.

Since mid-April, Moscow-backed separatists have been fighting government troops in eastern Ukraine in a conflict the UN estimates has killed nearly 2,600 people. On Thursday, a NATO military officer told The Associated Press the ranks of Russian soldiers directly involved in the conflict have grown.

Kremlin officials repeatedly have denied their troops or military assets are involved.

Iraq. Kurds tell Baird they need heavy weapons

Canada and allies France, Italy, Britain and Australia are, at the request of the Iraqis and Americans, helping to airlift guns, mortars and ammunition to Iraqi forces and the Kurdish Peshmerga, who have shouldered the bulk of the ground fighting against the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS).

Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird visited a front-line Peshmerga post in Irbil, Iraq, on Thursday, with NDP and Liberal parliamentary critics Paul Dewar and Marc Garneau.

A senior Kurdish official made an urgent plea Thursday for heavy weaponry to fight the rampaging terrorist insurgency.

"We need more weapons.... It will be a long fight," said Faud Hussein, chief of staff to the president of the Kurdish Regional government.

But Baird politely deflected all talk of bolstering arms shipments to the Kurds, choosing instead to change the channel to his stated purpose for this trip — to encourage the development of a strong, new, inclusive central government in Baghdad. THE CANADIAN PRESS

U.S. fears Syrian weapons will end up in wrong hands

The United States is concerned that the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) and other terrorists could get a hold of chemical weapons if Syria is hiding any stockpiles, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations said Thursday.

Samantha Power spoke to reporters after the Security Council received a briefing from Sigrid Kaag, who heads the effort to rid Syria of its chemical weapons.

The joint mission of the UN and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons will end at the end of the month after destroying nearly all of Syria's declared stockpile. But Kaag said there are discrepancies in Syria's weapons declaration. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tomorrow's leaders look ahead to the New Canada

Charlottetown.
A selected few come together to discuss crucial areas in Canada's development over the next five decades

STEPHANIE ORFORD
For Metro

What will Canada become in the next 50 years? The New Canada Conference, held from Aug. 31 to Sept. 3, brought together delegates aged 19 to 24 from across Canada to answer that question.

One hundred delegates from across the country were chosen to attend the conference in Charlottetown, as part of P.E.I. 2014.

During the event, delegates broke into eight concentrations, each discussing a critical area in Canada's development over the next 50 years. At the end of the conference they gathered again and presented their ideas — all summarized in a conference Ideabook.

"My eyes were opened to so many things I never thought of," said Caitlin Taylor, a travel blogger with Saskatchewanderer, who collaborated as part of the Media and Technology group. "I learned so much and I want to share that."

Joseph Darcel, a sciences student at the University of Manitoba who worked in the Health and Wellness stream, called his peers at the conference "a very accomplished group."

"(The conference) was a chance for me to interface with people who didn't share my background," said Darcel. "It provided a helpful and informative way to engage in that dialogue and learn about different ways of being Canadian."

Civic Engagement and Social Cohesion Facilitator: Dave Meslind

How can we create a culture of participation in Canada?

"In order for democracy to work properly, we need to focus on enhancing social cohesion, focusing on social determinants of health and community engagement," said Olivia Dorey, a Nova Scotian studying public health and administration at the University of Ottawa who participated in the Civic Engagement and Social Cohesion discussion group.

Delegates discussed solutions like alternative voting systems and democracy in schools.

The goal? "Build a society in which our democracy can flourish," Dorey said.

Health and Well-being Facilitator: Ryan Meili

Factors such as income, education, housing and nutrition have been found to be the strongest determinants of the health and well-being of the Canadian population — so how can Canada develop a system to address these?

Delegates focused on how to target the causes of poor health and well-being, discussing issues such as "how Canada can work with aboriginal peoples to move into the future equitably," according to Darcel.

Delegates take part in the New Canada Conference in Charlottetown this week. COURTESY DAVID PIKE

Learning and Social Development Facilitator: Paul Kershaw

The group focused on ideas to strengthen the learning and social development of Canada's children.

"For me, our group's across-the-board recognition of the need for culturally aware, accessible and inclusive social services was most impactful," said Trent Warner, a public relations student at Mount Royal University in Calgary who participated in the Learning and Social Development group.

"We were all able to recognize the intersectional links between those people in our country who are marginalized and oppressed, and the inherent hindrances in the social system that erase diversity and personal identity."

Justice and Equity Facilitator: Josh Paterson

Canada's relationship with its First Nations and the country's treatment of newcomers are two of the most fraught issues in the country's history.

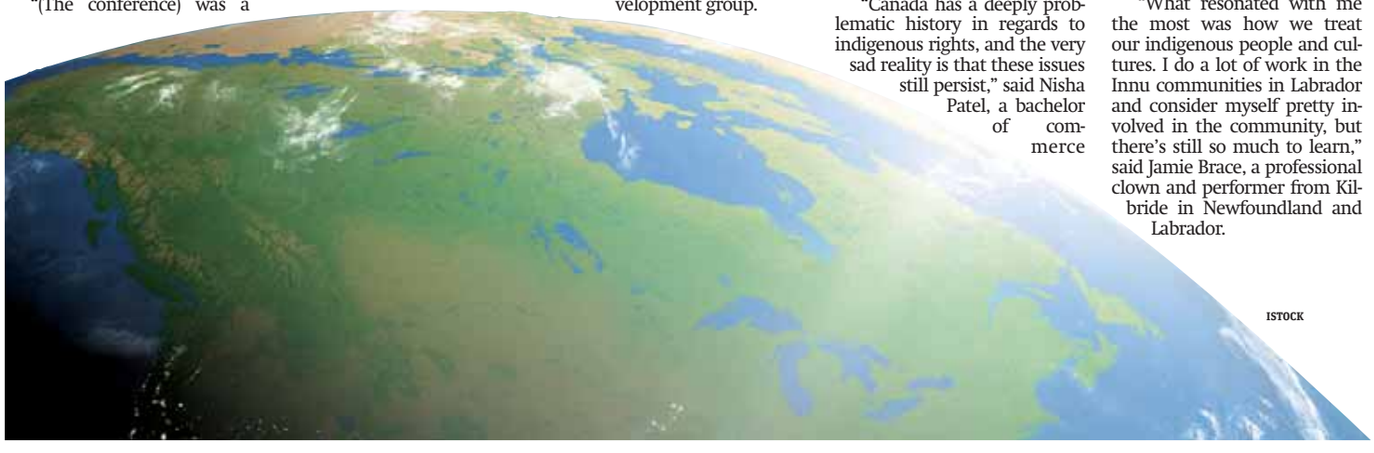

"Canada has a deeply problematic history in regards to indigenous rights, and the very sad reality is that these issues still persist," said Nisha Patel, a bachelor of commerce candidate at the University of Alberta and part of the Justice and Equity working group.

"Although I'm troubled by this, I was moved by how passionate my peers were, and I'm confident that we can change whatever we want."

Arts and Creativity Facilitator: Melissa Mongiat

As Canada's urban populations grow, culture, creativity and inclusivity are becoming critical in helping citizens connect and create healthy cities.

"What resonated with me the most was how we treat our indigenous people and cultures. I do a lot of work in the Innu communities in Labrador and consider myself pretty involved in the community, but there's still so much to learn," said Jamie Brace, a professional clown and performer from Kilbride in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Environment and Economy Facilitator: Jesika Briones

Countries around the world, including Canada, are going through an energy transition, said Jesika Briones, a business development manager for the Advanced Energy Centre in Toronto.

The world's population is growing explosively, availability of non-renewable energy resources is declining, and extraction and exploitation of these resources impacts the environment.

How can Canada and all of its stakeholders work to balance these factors and create a new energy economy?

Delegates looked at potential routes Canada could take in the next 50 years, including the use carbon taxes and the development of a national energy strategy.

Technology and Media Facilitator: Stephanie McGrath

Where is technology going and how can Canada stay ahead of the curve?

As content — video, text, photos and beyond — becomes available in even more formats and places than it is now, "we need to find a way to navigate the Internet," said Saskatchewanderer blogger Taylor.

One of the biggest challenges will be to create "better media literacy in schools, teaching kids from a young age to think critically about media," Taylor said.

Canada and the World Facilitator: Stéfanie von Hlatky

Current conflicts in Iraq, Syria and Ukraine indicate that our traditional approaches to diplomacy and defence aren't enough, said Stéfanie von Hlatky, director of the Centre for International and Defence Policy (CIDP) at Queen's University.

"As Canadians, we need to ask ourselves what we're willing to fight for in this volatile global security environment," said von Hlatky. "I think we've lost sight of that with the war fatigue that followed the mission in Afghanistan."

Delegates discussed alternative scenarios for Canadian involvement in international crises.

ISIS. Silicon Valley firms fight spread of grisly video after second beheading

Silicon Valley firms were prepared this week to quickly block video of an Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) militant beheading an American journalist, after a previous video by the same group showing the death of James Foley ricocheted through social networks in what was seen by some as a propaganda coup for the extremists.

The video that spread Tuesday showing the beheading of American journalist Steven Sotloff was first uploaded onto a different website and quickly deleted when copied onto YouTube, slowing the spread of posts linking to it, said a Silicon Valley insider. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BP acted with 'gross negligence' in 2010 oil spill

A judge's ruling in the 2010 Gulf of Mexico oil spill case — that could cost BP an additional $17.6 billion US in fines — sent the company's shares tumbling Thursday. BP was found by District Judge Carl Barbier to have acted with "gross negligence," leading to the nation's worst offshore oil spill. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The fight to supersize McJob wages rages on

Can I get a raise with that? The movement continues to pressure fast-food giants into increasing employee wages to $15 an hour

Police handcuffed several protesters in New York and Detroit on Thursday as they blocked traffic in the latest attempt to escalate their efforts to get McDonald's, Burger King and other fast-food companies to pay their employees at least $15 US an hour.

The protests, which are planned by labour organizers for about 150 cities nationwide throughout Thursday, are part of the Fight for $15 campaign. Since the protests began in late 2012, organizers have switched up their tactics every few months.

Before Thursday's protests, organizers said they planned to engage in non-violent civil disobedience to draw more attention to the cause. In the past, supporters have showed up at a McDonald's shareholder meeting and held strikes. The idea of civil disobedience arose in July when 1,300 workers held a convention in Chicago.

The movement, which is backed financially by the Service Employees International Union and others, has gained attention at a time when the wage gap between the poor and the rich has become a hot political issue. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Current wage

Many U.S. fast-food workers do not make much more than the federal minimum wage of $7.25 US an hour, which adds up to about $15,000 a year for 40 hours a week.

1 Angelina Jolie's Dress. If it wasn't enough that Brangelina married in one of the weddings in the history of ever, photos of Angelina were released in her Versace gown covered with colourful artwork by her six children. Yes, a generation of wedding dresses will now come plastered with children's art. Love — and family.

2 YouTube sensation. Matthew Santoro, a 29-year-old St. Catharines, Ont. man, creates wicked listicle videos such as 10 Inventors Killed by Their Own Inventions! and 50 AMAZING Facts to Blow Your Mind. He's becoming a YouTube celebrity with the millions of views his videos garner and his 2.4 million followers. He's the Next Big Thing. Homegrown in Canada.

3 Bionic teen. Surrey, B.C., teenager Drew Daniel is using crowdfunding to help him raise money for a new hand. Born without his left hand and using a basic prosthetic, the 18-year-old wants a Bebionic 3, a state-of-the-art prosthetic that allows its users to write, lift weights and even grip a Styrofoam cup. He needs $28,000 and he's already a little over a third of the way there.

4 #AsteroidMission Contest. NASA is launching a time capsule to ride aboard the OSIRIS-REx in 2016 to the asteroid Bennu and is asking for space-themed messages and images via Twitter and Instagram. The best submissions it receives to #AsteroidMission will be included. When it returns to Earth in 2023, hopefully it will have @replies from aliens.

5 Yee-ha! CBC is broadcasting the 2014 Canadian Country Music Association Awards this Sunday from Rexall Place in Edmonton. It will showcase the tremendous talent this country has to offer, but the main event of the show may well be its co-hosts Jann Arden and Rick Mercer. Anything could happen with them — such as a comedic country duet.

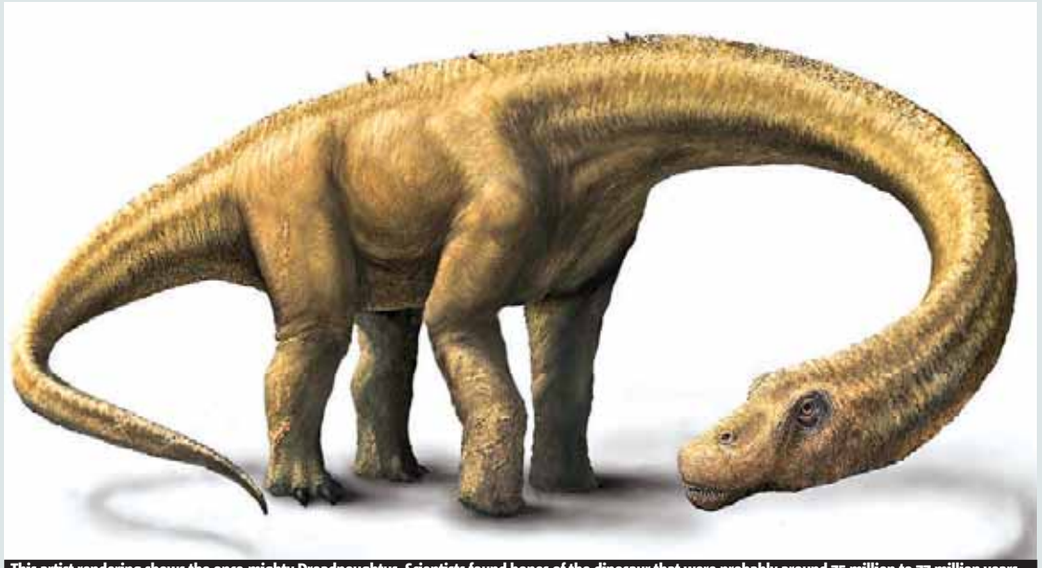

6 Perfect day for a conception. Country-music star Carrie Underwood and her NHL hubby, Mike Fisher, announced they're preggers on the perfect day: Labour Day. She posted a photo to Instagram with her dogs wearing "big brother" and "big sister" shirts. Fisher tweeted: "We haven't picked names yet but it's looking like Fly is gonna fly. #boyorgirl #flyfisher". Nice try. No way.

7 Bachelor in Paradise finale. The show where people fall in and out of love every other minute comes to its conclusion next Monday. Marcus and Lacy are the couple that will probably most likely go on to possibly marry, but the couple that I want to sail off together are Michelle and Cody. They are a reality show version of Bat Girl and The Incredible Hulk.

8 TIFF Festival Street. A new twist to the Toronto International Film Festival this year is its "Festival Street," where people can check out plays, experience pop-up performances, watch outdoor concerts, screenings and comedy performances and more. Who knows? This street might just become Spot the Celebrity Street with A-listers galore.

Dreadnoughtus ("fearing nothing")

This artist rendering shows the once-mighty Dreadnoughtus. Scientists found bones of the dinosaur that were probably around 75 million to 77 million years old. MARK A. KLINGLER/CARNEGIE MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massive dino from Argentina should help reveal secrets of ancient behemoths

Researchers studying the remains of an enormous dinosaur — a creature that was bigger than seven bull elephants — have given it an equally colossal name: Dreadnoughtus, or "fearing nothing."

Scientists hope its unusually well-preserved bones will help reveal secrets about some of the largest animals ever to walk the Earth. The four-legged beast, with a long neck and powerful 8.8-metre tail, stretched about 25.9 metres long and weighed about 65 tonnes. That's more than seven times the weight of even a plus-size male African elephant.

Kenneth Lacovara of Drexel University in Philadelphia, who found the specimen in Argentina's southern Patagonia in 2005, said he can't claim it is the most massive dinosaur known because the remains of comparably sized beasts are too fragmentary to allow a direct comparison.

But it's the heaviest land animal whose weight during life can be calculated directly with a standard technique that analyzes bones of the upper limbs, he said. And its bones indicate it was still growing when it died.

Among the questions it can help scientists investigate, said Jeff Wilson of the University of Michigan, is what kind of anatomical features were needed to let a dinosaur grow so huge. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

‘No bad Bill Murray movies’

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Bill Murray in his latest film, St. Vincent. Sept. 5 is Bill Murray Day at TIFF, with free screenings planned for some of his most iconic films, including Groundhog Day, Stripes and, of course, Ghostbusters. CONTRIBUTED

Synopsis

On Sept. 5, the Reel Guys will be wearing our matching glow-in-the-dark Dr. Venkman khaki T-shirts to celebrate TIFF’s Bill Murray Day. Beginning at 10 a.m., the TIFF Bell Lightbox in Toronto will feature free screenings of Stripes, Groundhog Day and, everybody’s favourite, Ghostbusters, in advance of the world premier of Murray’s new movie St. Vincent. “I’m a nut,” Murray says, “but not just a nut.” His movies, which range from nutty comedies to dramas and everything in between, show his range. Today, as we celebrate the genius that is Bill Murray, the Reel Guys select a few must-sees.

Bill Murray Day. Think you’re a big Bill Murray fan? Check out these lesser-known films and roles for a glimpse into the depth of his talent

Richard: Mark, I feel happy just knowing that I live in the same world as Bill Murray. I’ve never met him, but his very existence and the existence of films like Meatballs, Ghostbusters, Lost in Translation and any of his movies with Wes Anderson make my world a better place.

If I had to choose one little-seen Murray movie to tout, it would be Where the Buffalo Roam — his take on the life of the high priest of Gonzo journalism, Hunter S. Thompson. It’s not a great film, but it’s worth it to hear Murray say the famous line, “I hate to advocate drugs or liquor, violence, insanity to anyone, but, in my case, it worked.”

Mark: Richard, here’s my pick for a little-known film starring Murray: The Razor’s Edge. At the height of Murray’s first round of fame, he managed to miscast himself in a Somerset Maugham costume drama about a man’s search for spirituality.

His acting style is completely at odds with the rest of the material, as he’s playing the part as a louche 19th-century wiseass. And you know what? I love it!

Also from this time period, the mid-’80s, is the underrated Scrooged, a great retelling of A Christmas Carol. Traditionalists who fondly remember Alistair Sims would be aghast, but Murray really knows how to shake off the cobwebs and make the movie funny and oddly touching.

RC: Have you seen Murray in Hyde Park on Hudson? He plays Franklin D. Roosevelt and he gives the kind of effortless performance that made me wonder what might have happened to his career if The Razor’s Edge hadn’t been such a flop, forcing him back into comedy. But he can switch back and forth easily.

The same year he played an undertaker in Get Low, he also played an exaggerated version of himself as a man who plays at being a zombie during the apocalypse so he can continue playing golf unbothered by the undead in Zombieland.

It’s a surreal cameo that, like most of Murray’s appearances, is worth the price of admission.

MB: There may be bad movies that Bill Murray is in but there are no bad Bill Murray movies. He consistently rises above the material. But when the script is top-notch, there is no beating him.

I’m thinking here of Groundhog Day — one of the best and smartest comedies of the past 30 years.

He takes a clever idea and turns it into something transcendent, even philosophical. Great movie, great performance.

RC: In the transcendent and philosophical pile, I’d throw in Broken Flowers, where Murray plays a man on a journey to reconnect with all the women he knew before he became a burned-out Don Juan.

Ebert gave this four out of four stars; I give it five out of four. It’s that good.

MB: Yes, a great role for him. But consider this: his supporting role in Tootsie, where he nearly steals scenes from the great Dustin Hoffman.

Does Forrest Gump live up to our nostalgia-tinted memories?

MATT PRIGGE
Metro World News in New York

In 1994, the movies belonged to Forrest Gump. It was the year's highest-grossing film, narrowly besting The Lion King, and was at one point the fourth biggest moneymaker in film history. It took home six of the 11 Oscars for which it was nominated, including best picture and best actor — Tom Hanks' second consecutive win after Philadelphia. Its soundtrack, littered with recycled hits from the '60s and '70s, was a hit too, and the 1986 source novel, by Winston Groom, became a bestseller.

But 20 years is a long time, and one era's monster hit is another's "dated" (that awful word) embarrassment. Now that it's being rereleased in theatres, in a probably unnecessary IMAX redo, here are a few ways to look at Gump two decades down the line.

As the victim of a backlash

Anything that has the cultural impact Forrest Gump did will attract a backlash. The one it got came harsh and fast. By the time the Oscars rolled around in March of 1995, there were two kinds of Americans: those who embraced Gump, with its idyllic view of America during troubled times, and those who were crazy for Pulp Fiction, the darker, more original bad boy movie of the year. Quentin Tarantino's juggernaut wound up having a larger impact on movies and the zeitgeist, creating careers and wave upon wave of imitators.

Gump is still beloved; 14th place on the all-time list of popular movies by the Internet Movie Database users (ahead of One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, behind Inception) is nothing to sneeze at. But ranking higher are two other 1994 titles: Pulp Fiction (No. 5) and The Shawshank Redemption (No. 1). Gump was a critic's hit upon release, too, but retrospective reviews have been less kind. Indeed, it's become a critical punching bag among the cognoscenti — the film one holds up as the populist hit that quickly turned mouldy and insufferable.

As a conservative beacon

In Groom's novel, Gump is a rougher character: He swears, he has sex and he even, briefly, becomes a folk singer along with BFF Jenny. Eric Roth's screenplay sands Gump down; he becomes the embodiment of all that is decent about America, who chooses to fight for his country while Jenny embraces hedonistic hippiedom and pays a price. The counterculture is depicted as evil; the SDS guy beats women and the Black Panthers are portrayed as scary black men. It's easy to read Gump as portraying that conservative canard about the failure of the hippies to impact the change they sought (though it skips the part where some of them turn into mega-capitalists in the '80s). For the record, Gump's producers claim it's apolitical, while its reliably liberal star likely disagrees with this reading as well.

As a bastardization of a novel

There are a lot of changes from Groom's novel, some already detailed. But the most dramatic is the physical change. In the book, Gump is six feet six inches 242 pounds; Groom imagined John Goodman for the role. Tom Hanks, meanwhile, is a lean six feet, and though his Gump plays football, just like his literary counterpart, it's because he can run, not because he can sack players. The book Gump is also an idiot savant, not just an idiot, who can read books (if not remember them well) and who becomes a chess champion. Among the many other unfilmed misadventures he gets into — which would make for a no doubt crazier movie — are him going to space with an ape named Sue, his four year imprisonment by cannibals and him becoming a stunt man and a pro wrestler. Then again, 142 minutes is already pretty long.

As a pioneering technological achievement

It doesn't always seem it, but Forrest Gump was a technological miracle — the rare time when it was a drama, not a sci-fi or action film, with radical special effects. Its main achievement was seamlessly integrating modern actors into archival footage. Director Robert Zemeckis had previously blended toons and live action in Who Framed Roger Rabbit. Here he had Tom Hanks mill about with John F. Kennedy, moon Lyndon Johnson and set up John Lennon with quips on The Dick Cavett Show.

It's an incredible feat — and also, in a sense, unnerving. Hanks' costar, Robin Wright, recently starred in The Congress, which satirizes the technique of digitally messing with old likenesses. She plays a version of herself whose facial expressions and physical movements have been scanned into a computer, so that animators can create movies that only seem to star her, preserving her youth on screens while the real one ages and decays. Gump did a similar thing 20 years ago and in a way that seemed thrilling, not scary.

Mystery

The Captive

Director. Atom Egoyan

Stars. Ryan Reynolds, Mireille Enos

Years after his young daughter vanished without a trace from the back seat of his truck, a father receives newfound hope that she is alive and being held in captivity in this drama from Academy Award-nominated director Atom Egoyan. Matthew (Ryan Reynolds) and Tina (Mireille Enos) were a happy couple before their daughter Cassandra was taken from them. In the aftermath of the tragedy, their relationship began to dissolve.

Once scorned by Hollywood's finest, the world of television has in recent years become increasingly attractive to filmmakers. Exemplifying the trend, these iconic directors have turned the small screen into their playing field.

AFP

5 Filmmakers in the TV game

Steven Soderbergh

Steven Soderbergh GETTY IMAGES

Last year, Soderbergh announced the end of his career as a feature film director. But the director, who won the top prize at Cannes in 1989 for his feature debut Sex, Lies, and Videotape, is actually more active than ever and has simply shifted his focus to TV. Since helming the TV movie Behind the Candelabra for HBO, which earned him the Emmy for best director in the category, Soderbergh has kept up the momentum with a number of TV projects. Besides producing and directing every episode in the first season of The Knick — the medical series premiered on Cinemax this summer and starring Clive Owen — Soderbergh is working on Red Oaks, a comedy ordered by Amazon Studios. He is also developing a TV adaptation of his feature The Girlfriend Experience, which he will produce for Starz.

Alejandro Gonzales Iñárritu

Alejandro Gonzales Iñárritu GETTY IMAGES

Thanks to his 2006 feature Babel, Iñárritu became the first Mexican director to be nominated for the Academy Award for best director and the first to claim the best director award at Cannes. These prestigious honours have not prevented him from taking a break from the silver screen for his next project, a new series titled One Percent. Set against the backdrop of the organic farming community, the black comedy is in the process of recruiting A-list actors Ed Helms (The Office, The Hangover), two-time Oscar-winner Hilary Swank and veteran actor Ed Harris. One Percent has not yet been picked up by a network, but its producers should have no trouble finding a taker.

Guillermo del Toro

Guillermo del Toro GETTY IMAGES

Known for his signature dark fantasy world, the Mexican filmmaker and novelist chose a familiar subject for his first major TV project, which is adapted from the vampire book trilogy he co-authored with Chuck Hogan. Del Toro recently dove headlong into TV as an executive producer and sometime director on The Strain, which premiered on July 13. The thriller series is adapted from the trilogy's first book, which was published in 2009. The Fall and The Night Eternal followed in 2010 and 2011 respectively.

Steven Spielberg

Steven Spielberg AFP

Widely considered to be one of the most iconic filmmakers of his generation, Steven Spielberg actually got his start on the tube, and he hasn't forgotten it. His first big success was the TV movie Duel, which first aired in 1971 and went on to a theatrical release in 1973. Despite his significant achievements in cinema, the filmmaker has always remained active in the world of television, often as a director but namely as a producer. To name a few productions, Spielberg was behind the fantasy series Amazing Stories (from 1985), the sci-fi drama Terra Nova (2011) inspired by his blockbuster Jurassic Park, and the musical series Smash (2012).

J.J. Abrams

J.J. Abrams GETTY IMAGES

Although he dreamed of making great movies like his idol Steven Spielberg, it was through the small screen that J.J. Abrams got his start in show business. He started to gain notoriety in 1998 as a creator on Felicity. In 2001, he founded his production company Bad Robot, through which he launched the hit show Alias, followed by the massively popular Lost and later Fringe in 2008. Meanwhile, he saw his filmmaking dreams come true, landing in the director's chair of Mission Impossible III to kick off his cinema career.

Sequel. Teen stars Nathan Gamble and Cozi Zuehlsdorff reunite for another silver screen splash

scene@metronews.ca

"All I did was teach you not to cover her blowhole," he says.

"I wouldn't have known that," she laughs.

No, that's not the punchline to a bad joke, it's part of the easy banter between Dolphin Tale 2's teen stars Nathan Gamble and Cozi Zuehlsdorff. They were preteens when they first worked together on Dolphin Tale, the story of Winter, an injured dolphin rescued by the Clearwater Marine Hospital and fitted with a prosthetic tail.

"My character didn't really get to go underwater in the first one," says Cozi, "so it was all, almost, a new experience.

"Winter and Nathan were the veterans and they taught me and Hope (the second movie's dolphin star) the ropes."

Like not covering the blowhole.

Dolphin Tale 2 is a continuation of Winter's tale. This time around Sawyer and Hazel and the Clearwater Marine Hospital folks search for a companion for the lonely dolphin.

"Think about it," says Nathan, "has there ever been a sequel to a true story? And one that is also true?

"It's pretty rare."

The second movie's story was inspired by a true event that happened during the wrap party for the first film.

"That's when we got the call that Hope was rescued," says Nathan.

"We were there and so it feels like we were a little bit part of the story," he adds.

"The truck pulled up and Hope was really carried by hand up to the pool," says Cozi, "and really lowered into the pool the way you see in the movie.

"It was incredible. (Dolphin Tale 2) is as true-to-life as you could get without saying it was a wrap party for a movie.

"That wouldn't have fit into the story."

What does fit into the movie is Nathan's relationship with Winter, a bond formed years ago.

"There was this one moment on the second one where we were just hanging out," he says.

"I did this thing where I tilted my head and said, 'Hey Winter, how's it going?' She bubbled at the surface and sank to the bottom. Her trainer said, 'That's really bizarre,' and then remembered that was one of the behaviours I gave her on the first film and they haven't done that since the first film.

"That means she remembers me doing it three years ago, which is really bizarre."

Sebastien Grainger, left, and Jesse F. Keeler decided it was time to bury the hatchet. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Estranged rockers roar back to life

Death From Above 1979. Popular indie rock duo reunites for their first official album in nearly a decade, to the delight of ravenous fans

Time and space have been good for the inner workings of Death From Above 1979, but drummer/vocalist Sebastien Grainger has a different take on the situation.

"We don't need space to make this band work," he says. "We need proximity."

Death From Above released The Physical World, its first album in a decade — and only the second of its career — this past Tuesday, ending a long silence by one of Toronto's most revered post-millennial indie-rock acts.

Few observers were optimistic it would ever be broken when the duo blew apart in 2006. But the band roared back to life decisively this week, setting up a pop-up shop (and tattoo parlour) on Queen Street West that might be the site of the "small shows" Grainger recently predicted via Reddit.

Even when the bad vibes from the split had cleared and Grainger and bassist Jesse F. Keeler started speaking again for the first time in five years — en route to some high-profile reunion gigs at the SXSW, Coachella and Lollapalooza festivals in 2012 — the pair still viewed the prospect of a new record with suspicion.

It was something they wouldn't consider, says Grainger, "until we'd kind of proved to ourselves that we enjoyed it and that people were enjoying it."

The fact that a lot of people were thirsting for more DFA became clear when its return to the stage at Austin's Beauty Bar for SXSW in March 2012 provoked a riot amongst fans, who tore down the venue's back-alley fences to get into the performance.

Grainger and Keeler, however, fretted from the get-go that they didn't have any fresh material for the reunion and were conscious of prematurely becoming a nostalgia act, so they cautiously began testing new tunes on subsequent tours until the public reaction felt right.

"There's a certain goodwill that's extended toward reunion bands," says Grainger. "At a certain point, we didn't want to be a reunion band anymore."

"We're playing this music that is Seb-and-Jesse 'skill level' in 2003, when we actually recorded the record. And now, here we are with all these additional tools in our tool box — skill- and music- and concept-wise — and we're still playing these same things," says Keeler. "For me, we either had to stop playing again, because it was just like 'All right, that's the thing you were talking about years ago and now we've done it and we're done,' or we did this. It had to be a living thing for us to continue with it."

Both sides of the DFA partnership established themselves as individual talents during their time apart. Those outside pursuits have also made it much easier to work together again.

Both Keeler and Grainger are more comfortable in their own skins and to take the heavy moments on The Physical World to heavier places, while pursuing their pop inclinations to even poppier extremes.

ALAN CROSS

Spooky sounds, Icelandic melodies and a quirky rocker

Coelacanth/ Teach Me Equals

Any band that can write a song about a once-thought-to-be-extinct prehistoric fish is OK by me. This is part of what they call "scrape rock" — whatever that is.

Tina/HEK

Pleasant indie folk-pop from an Icelandic singer-songwriter. And like everything from that country, there's the inevitable connection to Bjork. In this case, it's because the album was produced by her ex-husband.

Follow Me, Like Me/My Son the Bum

Long Beach, N.Y. band (motto: "No cut & paste rock here!") that really, really wants you to follow them on Twitter and like them on Facebook. They even wrote a song about it.

Video game review

Name. Professor Layton vs. Phoenix Wright

For. Nintendo 3DS

Rated. Teen

Apparently transported to medieval times, Layton and Phoenix must use their skills to defend a woman accused of witchcraft. You'll solve magic puzzles in one chapter and face an inquisition court in the next, with both franchises mixing together their styles and humour for an entertaining display of animated seething, weeping, pointing, and posturing. The puzzles are creative, if confusing at times, and the courtroom battles offer some neat twists, but I really like the subtle way the two heroes meet and try on each other's roles. No objection here. KRIS ABEL

Michael Cera takes New York

No sleep till Brooklyn.
Cera is wide-eyed with new projects since settling down in NYC

CINDY ORD/GETTY IMAGES

Brooklyn is currently awash with facial hair, hipsters and tons of kale — and now 100 per cent more Michael Cera.

The 26-year-old star of Juno and Superbad has relocated to the New York borough after several years in which he would visit the city and then feel sad when it was time to go home to Los Angeles.

"I was not really enjoying living in L.A. Aside from all my friends out there, the city didn't really fit me, I thought. And vice versa," he says. "I always loved New York. I always wanted to live here since I was a kid."

The move makes sense. If you think about it, Cera has always seemed like more of a New Yorker — intellectual, arty, low-key, slyly cynical — than the plastic pretty boys over on the other coast.

It also coincides with Cera exploring new artistic expressions — the release of an indie folk album and his Broadway debut, all this summer. "Yeah, it's a few things happening at once," he says, humbly and yet guarded.

The play he's chosen seems a comfortable fit with many of Cera's previous film roles. It's Kenneth Lonergan's This Is Our Youth, a portrait of adrift, privileged post-adolescents that co-stars Kieran Culkin and Tavi Gevinson.

Cera plays Warren, a nerdish rich kid who shows up at his friend Dennis's Manhattan apartment in 1982 with $15,000 he has stolen from his menacing father. They come up with a dangerous plan to not only return the money and avoid punishment, but also to party.

The script calls Warren "a strange barking-dog of a kid with large tracts of thoughtfulness in his personality" who is "just beginning to find beneath his natural eccentricity a dogged self-possession." In other words, not too much of a stretch.

Cera says he had no reservations about his ability to work onstage. "I would have doubts if it were something different, something completely outside of my wheelhouse. Like a musical, or something. Or, I don't know, Shakespeare."

The play over the years has featured such actors as Mark Ruffalo, Josh Hamilton, Matt Damon, Colin Hanks, Chris Klein, Jake Gyllenhaal and Anna Paquin. Cera and Culkin first performed the play in Australia in 2012 and added Gevinson and director Anna D. Shapiro for a pre-Broadway run at Chicago's Steppenwolf Theatre Company this summer.

"It was definitely really scary the first few times at Steppenwolf," he says. "But that kind of goes away. You get used to having an audience, I think. Your body gets used to that in a weird way."

To find himself on Broadway, Cera admits, is "pretty far-fetched," especially in a play that centres on the dialogue between disaffected, drug-addled young adults.

"I think it's fascinating that this has no bells and whistles, really," he says. "The value of the experience is this emotional arc and that, for a mainstream thing, I think that is significant."

Shapiro, a Tony Award-winner who directed Tracy Letts' August: Osage County, calls Cera "really quite honestly one of the most naturally gifted theatre actors I've ever seen."

"I adore him. I can't say enough about him. I'd work with him again in a heartbeat. I love what he brings. I love the way he behaves. He makes me laugh," she adds. "I love the guy."

Cera has also revealed his inner songwriter, quietly releasing an 18-song album on his Bandcamp website on Aug. 8. It's a collection of airy, folky tracks, some just wordless fragments, some more fully fleshed out.

"The music thing is not a particular ambition or something. It's just something I do at home," he says. "I didn't think that many people would find it or hear it because the Internet is such a sea, a blizzard of stuff."

The album, created using GarageBand software, is a part of technology that Cera can get behind. One he can't is obvious whenever he gets on a subway in his new home: camera phones. He says a lot of folks secretly take his picture.

"The world is just becoming this photo booth in a weird way," he says. "The only way to get used to it is to come to terms with it. You can't fight it."

Cera bemoans "the diluting of experiences" that happens with the endless snapping of photos. He says it's depressing to go to a museum and see people go from artwork to artwork, snapping away at each. "You're in front of it. Why are you already nostalgic about it?" he asks.

Or people who insist on recording everything, including concerts. "When are you going to watch that? Sitting around at your home and feeling sad about your life?" he jokes.

Hey, doesn't he already sound like a New Yorker?

Hemlock Grove will wrap up with a third season in 2015. AFP

Hemlock Grove. Netflix horror series to return

Netflix will wrap up its Hemlock Grove horror thriller in 2015 with 10 new episodes, the Hollywood Reporter says.

Released in April 2013, the drama's first season was a big hit with Netflix subscribers, despite being largely overshadowed in the press by talk of the platform's House of Cards, starring Kevin Spacey.

Created by Brian McGreevy and produced by Eli Roth, Hemlock Grove is set in a fictional Pennsylvania town where a series of strange events are taking place. While investigating a local murder case, the authorities are led to wonder whether the crime was committed by a human being or an animal.

After House of Cards and Orange Is the New Black, Hemlock Grove is the third Netflix series to reach its third season, and the first to have an end date. AFP

Film. Box office slumps to worst summer in years

Hollywood suffered its worst summer in years at the box office, as filmgoers apparently grew tired of blockbuster sequels and epic computer-generated fight scenes, experts said this week.

Between the first weekend of May and the Labour Day weekend, which traditionally marks the end of the summer season, U.S. films made $4.05 billion, down about 15 percent from last year.

That is the smallest box office total since 2006, when films made just $3.75 billion in North America, said Paul Dergarabedian, an analyst at movie data provider Rentrak.

When corrected for inflation, this is the worst summer box office since 1997, according to Rentrak.

But it could have been worse, if rogue superheroes had not saved the day.

Offbeat sci-fi flick Guardians of the Galaxy topped the box office in its fifth week in theatres, and became the biggest-grossing film of the year. Family-flick Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles also did well.

Guardians of the Galaxy is this year's biggest-grossing film. AFP

"Guardians and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles thankfully came at the perfect time, and enabled Hollywood to knock the summer deficit down to just under 15 per cent, from 20 just a month ago," Dergarabedian said.

But others disappointed, like Hercules, Edge of Tomorrow and The Expendables 3, which made only $34 million despite an all-star cast including Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sylvester Stallone, Mel Gibson and Harrison Ford. AFP

Sofia Vergara tops earning list for TV actresses

Modern Family star Sofia Vergara is the highest-paid U.S. TV actress for the third year in a row, earning about $37 million, according to a 2014 list published this week. The 42-year-old earned more than the top actor, Ashton Kutcher, who made about $26 million, according to Forbes magazine. The Colombian-born actress reportedly makes $325,000 per episode, but earns much more from endorsements, including being the face of Diet Pepsi. AFP

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Nude photos of Lawrence and other celebs added to artist's life-sized gallery

Wonder how Jennifer Lawrence's lawyers are going to deal with this one: Fear Google artist XVALA has announced the recent collection of leaked celebrity nude photos will be added to his upcoming No Delete gallery show in St. Petersburg, Fla. — printed out life-sized and unaltered on canvas.

"XVALA appropriating celebrity compromised images and the overall Fear Google campaign has helped strengthen the ongoing debate over privacy in the digital era," the artist's publicist, Cory Allen, says in a statement.

"The commentary behind this show is a reflection of who we are today. We all become 'users' and in the end, we become 'used.'"

And if we're famous enough, we become part of a public gallery show.

Rosie Perez

Rosie joins Rosie on View despite her 'annoying' voice

In case you thought one "Rosie joins the View" announcement wasn't enough? Rosie Perez has signed a deal to sit alongside Rosie O'Donnell and Whoopi Goldberg, reports Radar Online.

"Rosie was on the fence about doing it, but when news surfaced that ABC was looking elsewhere for A-list talent, like Ashley Judd, it spurred her decision," a source says. "Rosie has been in the mix, but no one thought it was going to happen. The testing on Rosie was that her voice was too annoying and she was too old. But they ended up going with her because they wanted someone famous and she appeals to the Latina demographic."

Mariah begins divorce process, Nick declares his undying love

NED EHRBAR
Metro in Hollywood

Mariah Carey and Nick Cannon appear to be approaching this whole breakup thing very differently. While Cannon is said to be eager for another chance, Carey seems to be ready to make the split official.

"Mariah has started the divorce process. She's getting all her ducks in a row," a source tells E! News. "She was devastated when he spoke out about their issues. She's started the proceedings to make sure the ball is in her court from now on."

Meanwhile, Cannon — who is reportedly banned from discussing the divorce publicly — has taken to tweeting about his marriage and his undying love for Carey.

"What infuriates me most is to hear people slander Mariah Carey. I will forever be indebted to her for blessing me with our children," he tweeted. "I will always love her unconditionally for this and so much more. Mariah Carey is an amazing mother and I trust her wholeheartedly."

He also has an interesting take on the gossip item that started the ball rolling: "And finally, 'trouble in paradise' is the dumbest phrase I've ever heard! I would never say that s—."

Deadmau5

Musician or cartoon? Disney wants to be clear

Deadmau5 is learning the hard way that Disney doesn't have much of a sense of humour, as the star DJ revealed the House of Mouse is taking legal action against him.

"Looks like Disney officially just filed in opposition of my trademark. Lawyer up, Mickey," deadmau5 tweeted this week. "Disney thinks you might confuse an established electronic musician/performer with a cartoon mouse. That's how stupid they think you are."

His lawyer, Dina LaPolt, explained it further: "In June of last year, deadmau5 applied to register the front-facing mau5head with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. Disney is now opposing the U.S. filing," she explains.

Phone-hacking scandal 'an honour to put to film'

George Clooney knows what movie he's directing next. The Good Night and Good Luck director will next take on the British phone-hacking scandal by adapting Nick Davies' book, Hack Attack for the screen, his company announced.

George Clooney

"This has all the elements — lying, corruption, blackmail — at the highest levels of government by the biggest newspaper in London," Clooney says. "And the fact that it's true is the best part. Nick is a brave and stubborn reporter and we consider it an honour to put his book to film."

No word yet on whether Hugh Grant, who became a phone-hacking activist during the scandal, will have a part, but we're sure he wants one.

Because everyone gets even busier in the fall, it's the perfect time to get organized and add some quick-and-easy meals to your roster of go-to recipes.

If you're used to reaching for boxed noodles in a culinary emergency, it's time to upgrade to the DIY version.

1. In a large pot of salted boiling water, cook the noodles al dente. Drain and drizzle with a little olive oil to prevent them from sticking together. Set aside.

2. In a large non-stick skillet over medium heat, cook the onion in the butter, stirring with a wooden spoon until golden brown. Add the meat and garlic. Continue cooking over high heat, crumbling the meat into small pieces with a spoon, until lightly browned. Season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle the flour and chili powder over the meat and stir to blend.

This recipe serves four. COURTESY RICARDOCUISINE.COM

Ingredients

- 1/2 lb (227 g) broad egg noodles (twisted)
- Olive oil
- 1 onion, finely chopped
- 2 tsp (30 ml) butter
- 1 lb (454 g) lean ground beef
- 1 clove garlic, finely chopped or crushed with a garlic press
- Salt and pepper
- 1 tsp (5 ml) all-purpose flour
- 1 tsp (5 ml) chili powder
- 1 cup (250 ml) chicken broth
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) soy sauce
- 1 tsp (5 ml) Worcestershire sauce
- 2 cups (500 ml) grated yellow cheddar cheese

FLASH FOOD

From your fridge to your table in 30 minutes or less

3. Add the broth, soy sauce, Worcestershire sauce and cheese. Stir until the cheese has melted. Add the noodles and toss to coat with the sauce. Remove the saucepan from the heat and let rest for 5 to 10 minutes. The sauce will thicken slightly. Adjust the seasoning. FOLLOW RICARDO ON SOCIAL MEDIA AND ON RICARDOCUISINE.COM OR SUBSCRIBE TO HIS MAGAZINE'S UPCOMING ENGLISH EDITION LAUNCHING THIS MONTH!

Satisfy your sweet tooth

LIQUID ASSETS

If you thought the popularity of sweeter red wines was starting to decline, drink again.

Demand for red juice with a touch (and in some cases a fistful) of sugar has never been stronger.

While snobs may turn up their noses, the growing selection of wines with a confectionary slant is appealing to new consumers who would traditionally fill their glasses with beer or a cocktail.

One of the latest countries trying to satisfy the market's sweet tooth is South Africa. Though it's made casual sipping reds with the pinotage grape for years, the 2011 Inception Deep Layered Red ($13.49 - $15.99) is a juicy shiraz-based blend.

Launched here in Canada before anywhere else, its sugary side — enhanced with a nice balance of ripe blueberry, blackberry and cherry fruit — isn't syrupy or cloying.

It's a party pleaser, especially if you're hosting a late summer barbecue.

Its flavour will get your guests' tongues wagging, as should its provocative Garden of Eden label design. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

As a special end-of-summer gift to our readers, Metro brings you the first chapter of The Afterlife of Stars, the newest book by award-winning author Joseph Kertes. Over the last week we've introduced you to the Beck brothers, two young boys grappling with the world around them as Russian tanks roll into Budapest during the final days of the Hungarian revolution. In this final instalment, Attila and Robert get a glimpse of the dangers that are around every street corner as their world is turned upside down.

The Afterlife of Stars

Will this be the last time the Beck brothers see their city? CONTRIBUTED

I felt a little strange, but I could hardly wait to see the square again. It had been some time since I'd been there. I had come with my class on a clear day last spring. Stalin had stood like a Titan in the square on a high stone pedestal, a bronze man more impressive than a building. (If you want to make someone look like the Lord himself, my advice would be to make him Big, his right arm raised high, his hand upturned, focusing the blue lens of heaven.)

When Attila and I turned the corner from Andrassy Avenue onto Dozsa Way, at first I thought we'd come to the wrong square. On Stalin's pedestal stood two boots the size of boilers, but no Papa.

"There!" Attila said, clapping his hands and hooting. We ran like mad toward the pedestal. Attila hooted again and jumped.

Stalin lay toppled behind his high stone bastion. He was entangled in ropes and chains, like a colossus hoisted from the sea. But his big bronze boots still stood. Rope ladders hung from them.

There were few other people in the square, surprisingly few, but they covered their open mouths when they saw what we saw and scrambled away, as if the fallen god's dark angels were still hovering, were about to take revenge.

But Attila was fearless. He pulled me along like a dog toward the fallen father.

A shot rang out, dinging something. I checked the windows all around the square, the trees, the moving shadows. A good breeze blew through the trees. Another shot pocked the pedestal.

My brother's tone sharpened. "Come!" he said. "Hurry." He was several rungs up one of the rope ladders. "Come!" he barked again.

I followed him. We scrambled up the sagging ladders. Who could have invented such a thing? I banged my elbow on the stone, scraped the knuckles of my left hand.

Attila was already on top. Several Russian soldiers came running toward their bronze leader from the other side.

Attila helped me reach the top of the pedestal. "We have to get inside."

"Inside what?"

"The boots. One each. There's a ladder up the far side of that one. You take that. I can get up this chain."

"We're going inside the boots?"

Attila was hoisting himself up the chain, deftly coordinating his hands and feet like a monkey.

I began to clamber up the second ladder. "What are we doing?" I grunted.

"We'll be like Mother Goose. We'll be the Brothers Goose."

Attila waited and watched me. Once I made it to the lip of the boot, I was surprised to see how cavernous it was inside, taller than I was. My brother gestured to me to raise the rope ladder — hoist it up with all my might — and let it fall inside the boot. I watched him do it first with his chain, then I did mine. The ladder was surprisingly bony and heavy. I stupidly avoided the ladder on the inside and instead slithered down into the boot, though I was not the best slitherer, and took quite a fall to the bottom, landing against my shoulder. I'd heard my brother sensibly drop feet first in his.

What now? I was quaking, suddenly taken with a chill, my teeth chattering. I looked up into Stalin's blue heaven. I was overcome with dread that we would soon become the Brothers Corpse, that it would have been a more glorious death to have been strung up in the Oktogon, that if we were to come out of this alive, my father would beat us, as he must.

I wondered suddenly where Stalin's bronze socks might have gotten to before I came to a conclusion I was not proud of: it was that Stalin had no actual feet, at least not this Stalin.

The inside of the boot darkened for a moment, and I distinctly remember thinking what a good idea clouds were, not to mention rain. I wondered if clouds had been an aesthetic choice or a practical one. And what about rain? My brother always questioned whether things had been created or had evolved, but I didn't care quite as much about that. For me, at the time, the difference was only a matter of gradual development versus sudden appearance. Though I struggled with such generalities, I was less concerned about them then and more interested in the mere fact of them. What, I wondered, must it have been like to be the first person to experience rain? What are these? There's a heavenly river and it is breaking up. These are shattered shards of river. Bits of river. Bits of lake. Lake beads. River beads. What is going on? Am I going to shrink or expand or drink or drown?

A shot clanged against my boot or Attila's. My teeth clattered like mad, like something loose inside me, a box of buttons.

Then just as suddenly a calm settled over me like a gossamer net. I recall with great clarity that very moment inside the boot. Was this the end? Would they find us in these boots? Would Attila jump out like the warrior rebel he was and take the bullet he was born to take? Would the Hungarians come to finish Stalin and complete their triumph? Would the Russians come first and fill the boots with concrete instead, monuments to Stalin's stalwartness? If they found my brother and me, would they make examples of us, chain us to the boots until the vultures came to peck out our eyes? Was there honor in that? And what was the protocol, the order, of killings? Soldiers first? Then civilians? Men first? Then the elderly? Then women? Finally children? And what was the cutoff mark? Was my brother still considered a child?

The soldier of the Oktogon dangled before my eyes like a clear statement, and I knew that Attila and I would not die like legends but like jokes, the Brothers Grimm without a tale, our family shaking their heads, not allowing our names to be uttered again.

I could not hear Attila in his boot. I wanted to call out to him but felt it best to stay quiet. I edged my way into the dark front of the boot, to where Stalin's toes would have been, and then I heard Attila loudly whisper my name. I crawled out from the toe, and he was there at the top of my boot. He must have pulled himself up. "Let's go, my tender love," he said. "It's all clear."

"How do you know?"

"Look at me. I'm not being shot at." He climbed down into my boot and hoisted me onto the rope ladder, urging me up before climbing out himself.

We flew down Damjanich Street and almost ran into a tank clattering to the right of us. I now saw that these beasts bruising around the streets were not meant to be stealthy or subtle. They were not even vehicles, more like instant buildings plopped down in the middle of the street, daring you to pass.

A squad of young men and a single young woman, a brunette with a determined look on her pretty, red face, turned a corner and came toward us. They were chanting, "Szabadsag! Szabadsag!" — Liberty! Liberty! — and waving a Hungarian flag with its familiar bars of red, white and green, but with the Communist insignia at its center cut out of it, leaving a hole.

More shots were fired from somewhere, clipping the stone face of a building. The squad of young people scattered. My brother grabbed me by the shoulder and yanked me into a doorway guarded by two stone lions. They stood on their hind legs, holding up the entrance, seeming to hold up the whole building. Sometimes it was angels who watched over an entrance; sometimes shapely stone maidens. But these were lions. It must have been a very heavy building. Stone lions will do things for you that real ones won't.

We waited several minutes, waited for quiet, before tiptoeing out. Attila and I veered swiftly to the left until we got out to Rakoczi Street. I could not catch my breath — I didn't even want to try. I could breathe later, I told myself. I found myself hoping we might see our parents again, and Klari, and my friend Zoli, possibly. Up ahead, a man stood calmly outside the Urania Movie Theater. He was dressed in a brown gabardine suit and wore a matching brown fedora. He was lighting a cigarette, turning away from the wind that brought us. The Urania was white and had Moorish windows. It always beckoned like a foreign land, like an exotic Arabian bazaar laden with wild and exquisite gifts, gifts with horns and warm gems.

We caught up to the man just as he exhaled his first full puff of smoke, just as a shot sounded, taking off his hat. For a stark and childish moment, the Baby Diviner growing inside of me traced the path of the bullet through the man's head as it knocked over everything in its path: his day, his night, his next puff of smoke, his dinner plate of veal paprikas, his smiling daughter holding up a glass to the light to see if it was cracked, his wife entering the dining room with the wine, wiping a damp hand on her apron.

The bullet might as well have struck us too, my brother and me. "Let's go!" Attila snapped. He pulled me straight through the doors of the Urania Theater, the white doors splattered now with blood.

An unsuspecting young woman, no bigger than a fawn, sat in her ticket booth. She smiled at us.

I was gasping, panting. "A man has been shot," I said.

"A man?" She rose with a creak from her chair to look out, raised her hand to her heart to protect it. "Oh," she said. The hand went to her mouth. She started to cry, but silently, sobbing, hiccupping.

"This way," Attila said.

"What?" she said. She was still looking outside. She could see blood on the glass.

"Now!" snapped my brother. "Now," he repeated, more gently. He was pointing into the theater, the promised darkness.

My teeth were clattering like a box of nails now, not buttons. The fawn girl's white skin had turned blotchy, suffused with fright, her eyes wide and a crazed white. To escape the hunter, the fawn pattered to the front of the theater near the screen and straight out a side door. I thought we were going to follow, but my brother pulled me down low into the seat beside him.

There, in the darkness, Tarzan unleashed a sound like a jungle aria. The Urania was showing Tarzan the Ape Man. The theater was majestic with its tall Arabian arches. A young couple sitting in a private box above us ignored Tarzan and Jane. They were making a meal out of each other's ears and lips. Would their love wither when they found the fallen man outside? Would Tarzan have helped the man in the brown suit?

Attila stared at the screen.

So that was the plan? We were going to sit now and watch a movie? We ran away from home, we hid in Stalin's boots, we saw a man shot, and now we were going to watch Tarzan the Ape Man? We saw a real man's head explode, but now we'd watch Johnny Weissmuller swing through the trees? There was an absoluteness to events as Attila experienced them. It is sleep time, and now I will sleep. It is eating time, and now I will eat. It is ducking into a theater time, and now I will duck. Once in the theater, I will watch a movie, which is what we do in a theater.

I could not draw a single satisfying breath. Tarzan fought a lion. Jane was pretty. Tarzan swam with crocodiles. Jane loved Tarzan. Tarzan trumpeted through the jungle. Cheetah cringed. But where was Kaiser Laszlo? Where was the man in the brown hat? Who would carry him away? What time was it? Had the Russians expelled our parents? Did our parents think we were dead?

"I'm going," I said, and got to my feet. Attila couldn't take his eyes off the screen. "I'm going," I said again, and began to march to the front of the theater, where the fawn had disappeared.

Attila slapped at the armrest but followed. I took a last look up at the solitary couple in the box, but they had no interest in anyone else, in the world beyond their faces. Attila heaved open the side door with his bum. The sun's yellow smack blinded us, but we ran through it toward home. A cool wind blew up from the Danube flecked with dust and leaves, but soon enough we could make out the familiar landmarks of our neighborhood and let down our guard a little. It was not until then that I finally found the meat of the air and took in a good gulp of it.

I stopped for a moment. "Why did they shoot the man with the brown hat, Attila?"

"I don't know," my brother said. He took my hand.

"What was the man doing?"

"He was lighting a smoke."

"And he got shot for that?"

I stopped, but Attila pulled us along. "Not for that," he said. "For stopping where he did, for being a standing target, for sport."

We got home just ahead of the Russians, who were late. When we slipped through the door, we were met by our father. I'd never seen him in such a fury. He was a snorting bull. He lifted Attila by the collar of his shirt, a mighty act, since my brother was almost full grown.

"You Russian!" Attila shouted at him.

Simon banged Attila up against the wall. But the matadors swooped down on them: my father's cousin Andras, his wife, Judit, our grandmother and mother. My father let Attila down but raised his fist at both of us like a biblical figure.

Our mother slipped between the raised fist and my brother's golden head.

"Don't hit them!" Judit said. She embraced her own swollen abdomen. She gasped and looked ready to faint. "Oh," she said to her belly. She staggered back into the living room with the help of her husband.

Lili, our mother, hugged and kissed my brother and me strenuously, squeezing too hard. "My lambs, my lambkins," she said.

Klari stood behind her. She looked especially disappointed, disappointment to equal my father's fury, as if her faith in life had been shaken, her faith in love.

Just as she hugged me hard too, Attila broke free, bellowed like Tarzan, pounded his chest and flew off to our room. I lost my breath again. My heart took off without a runner. The dead man in brown rose up in front of me, and I started to sob and shake. My grandmother sobbed with me, then my mother too, the three of us swaying together and sobbing.

My father snorted and slapped at his sides. "We have to go."

"Simon," my mother said through her tears, "we have our sons back."

"Great," he said. He slapped at his sides again. "We have to go. Now!"

We went to get our few things. Upon returning to the vestibule, we could hear Judit in the living room with Andras. "Are we just going to get on the train, just like that?"

"That's what we're going to do," said Andras. "Don't worry, dear, please."

"And the Russians will let us?"

"They're distracted just now, but not for long. They'll send in reinforcements, and when they do, we'll be stuck here. Our baby will be born here and grow up here."

"Is that so bad?" Judit whispered. "We grew up here."

"It will be bad, worse than we have known."

A short while later, Andras and Judit joined us in the hall. We were all leaving together, Andras and Judit included. They had brought their bags to our apartment, as well as a rolled-up carpet, a very old Persian one featuring a bird of paradise, which they treasured.

Minutes later, the Russians came, not a friendly group like the first one, and they pointed the way outward, out of our home.

CFL

Gaydosh signs with Hamilton Tiger-Cats

The Hamilton Tiger-Cats signed defensive tackle Linden Gaydosh on Thursday.

Hamilton selected the six-foot-four, 305-pound Gaydosh first overall in the 2013 CFL draft. Shortly afterwards, Gaydosh signed as a free agent with the NFL's Carolina Panthers.

After spending the entire 2013 NFL season on injured reserve with a back injury, Gaydosh reported to the Panthers' training camp before being sidelined with a foot ailment. He was released by the Panthers last month. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Josh Gordon the car salesman?

Josh Gordon wants to get you in a two-door convertible today.

A person familiar with his plans said the Browns' suspended Pro Bowl wide receiver will work for a car dealership while serving his NFL punishment.

Gordon was suspended for another violation of the league's substance-abuse policy last week, a banishment that will deprive the Browns of their top playmaker this season.

Gordon had hoped to play for Calgary in the Canadian Football League during his suspension. However, the CFL prohibits any suspended player under contract in the NFL from playing. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Stampeders' defence stingy under Stubler

Experienced.
Defensive end Shawn Lemon exuberantly declares Rich Stubler 'a genius'

With 27 years of CFL coaching experience under his belt, Rich Stubler has plenty of stories to tell.

And the Calgary Stampeders' colourful defensive co-ordinator has no shortage of entertaining material for his meetings with coaches and players.

"He has jokes for days about everything," said linebacker Juwan Simpson.

"We have to stop him, though, because meetings go a lot longer than they're supposed to because of stories."

Along with that cache of football lore is the experience and expertise that comes from serving on the coaching staffs of, and winning Grey Cups with, four other CFL clubs.

Add the high school, college and Arena Football League jobs Stubler has also held and he's been in the profession 45 years.

"He's probably forgotten more football than we all know in our whole defensive meeting room combined," defensive line coach DeVone Claybrooks said.

Stubler broke into the CFL as the Hamilton Tiger-Cats' defensive co-ordinator 31 years ago.

He's designed defences for 25 years with the Ticats, B.C. Lions, Edmonton Eskimos and Toronto Argonauts. He also served as the Argos' head coach in 2008.

John Hufnagel, Calgary's head coach/GM, hired Stubler this off-season after Rick Campbell left to become the head coach of the expansion Ottawa Redblacks. Stubler arrived following a two-year stint with B.C., whose defence was ranked first overall against the run and pass in 2012.

Halfway through the 2014 campaign, Calgary is allowing a league-low 14.9 points per game. In four contests this season, the Stampeders haven't surrendered an offensive touchdown. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Week 11 pick

Stampeders at Eskimos, Saturday, 5 p.m. (TSN)

The Battle of Alberta switches to Commonwealth Stadium with Calgary looking for the sweep following Monday's 28-13 home victory.

Running back Jon Cornish, the CFL's outstanding player last year, rushed for 163 yards and a TD on 17 carries. Calgary ran for 205 total yards in its 10th straight win over Edmonton while quarterback Bo Levi Mitchell completed 18 of 29 passes for 252 yards and a TD.

Adarius Bowman had eight catches for 123 yards — both game highs — but accounted for most of Edmonton's offence as Matt Nichols finished 18 of 30 passing for 203 yards.

Pick: Calgary

Bertuzzi hit. Steve Moore says he can now move on

Former NHL rookie Steve Moore can finally move past the on-ice attack that ended his career, he said Thursday, unburdened by a decade-long legal battle that inched through the courts.

Moore's multimillion-dollar suit against Todd Bertuzzi and the Vancouver Canucks over the infamous hit in 2004 was settled shortly before the scheduled Sept. 8 start of the trial.

It brings "mixed emotions," Moore said in a statement, recalling both the difficult years for his family and the "compassion and encouragement" he received along the way.

"The injuries I sustained in my rookie year, the years I spent trying to return to my NHL career and dealing with the loss of my career and the ensuing legal case, have been long and trying experiences," Moore wrote.

Moore, now 35, wrote that he looks forward to continuing to bring attention to the prevention and treatment of concussions and other head and neck injuries in sport through the Steve Moore Foundation.

"While my own hockey career was cut short, my love for the game has never diminished," he wrote.

In an interview earlier this year, he said he still suffers from headaches and low energy. The lawsuit, he said, was not so much about the money as being compensated for the loss of his dreams.

New hire to give Hockey Canada more brainpower

Keeping up. Manager of operations, analytics and video expected to bring 'analytical mind'

Hockey Canada doesn't want to fall behind the rest of the sport in the analytics department.

That much was clear with Wednesday's hiring of Misha Donskov as manager of hockey operations, analytics and video. Donskov will be primarily tasked with video responsibilities, but Hockey Canada president and CEO Tom Renney believes the former Ottawa 67's associate coach has more to offer.

"I think there's an opportunity to tap into his knowledge with respect to analytics and what might (be) best to measure, whether it's on-ice performance, whether it's how we put our camps together, whether it's the numbers of people we put in our camps," Renney said in a phone interview Thursday.

"He has an analytical mind, and having said that he certainly pays attention to the analytics of the game. I think there's lots of ways and means with which to incorporate his skill to that end."

Analytics go beyond traditional statistics such as goals, assists and plus or minus to measure things like puck possession, quality of competition and where players are on the ice.

Donskov replaces Andrew Brewer, who left his job as Hockey Canada's video coach to join Mike Babcock's staff with the Detroit Red Wings. Babcock heaped tons of credit on Brewer during the Olympic gold-medal run in Sochi for ensuring Team Canada was well-prepared along the way. Brewer got some analytics started before he left, and that's where Donskov picks up.

Donskov had recently been promoted to assistant GM of the Ontario Hockey League's 67's after spending two seasons as an associate coach. Before that he was an assistant coach/assistant GM with the London Knights.

Bruins

Krejci extended for another six years

The Boston Bruins signed centre David Krejci to a six-year, $43.5-million contract extension Thursday.

The deal begins in the 2015-16 season after the final season of his current contract.

Krejci led the Bruins last season with 50 assists and 69 points. He also led the NHL with a 39 plus-minus rating.

In eight NHL seasons, all with the Bruins, the 28-year-old has 110 goals, 268 assists and 378 points in 504 regular-season games.

Avalanche

Barrie gets two-year deal

The Colorado Avalanche signed Tyson Barrie to a two-year deal after a breakout season by the defenceman.

Barrie gave the Avalanche an offensive presence at the blue-line as he led the defencemen with 13 goals.

The 23-year-old played a big role in helping the team advance to the playoffs under coach Patrick Roy.

With three overtime goals last season, Barrie tied Colorado's single-season record set by David Jones in 2010-11. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Seattle dominates Packers in opener

'Fail Mary' rematch. Lynch leads Seahawks with two TDs, while Wilson finds Harvin seven times

Marshawn Lynch rushed for 110 yards and two touchdowns, Russell Wilson threw a pair of touchdown passes and the Seattle Seahawks started defence of their Super Bowl title with a 36-16 win over the Green Bay Packers on Thursday night.

Lynch, who ran for 1,257 yards and 12 touchdowns last season, barrelled through a trio of Packers for the TD with 3:41 left before halftime to give the Seahawks a 17-10 lead. He added a 3-yard TD run on the first play of the fourth quarter for a 29-10 advantage.

Wilson made sure everyone knew Percy Harvin was healthy, finding the speedy receiver seven times.

Aaron Rodgers threw for 189 yards and a touchdown, but the Packers' up-tempo offence was stymied by Seattle.

It was the first meeting between the teams since the infamous "Fail Mary" game two years ago. A disputed touchdown throw from then-rookie Wilson to Golden Tate as the clock wound down gave Seattle the 14-12 victory and paved the way to a resolution between the league and its locked-out game officials.

This time around, both teams are favoured to win their divisions and push each other for the NFC title.

The Seahawks celebrated their Super Bowl title with a pregame concert featuring the veteran grunge band Soundgarden and hit-maker Pharell to join the league's season opener festivities with a free concert at the parking lot of Century Link field.

The concert was open to all fans, even if they were not attending Thursday's game.

PGA. McIlroy plays just enough to take the lead at BMW Championship

Rory McIlroy felt anything under par was a good score Thursday at Cherry Hills, even if he had reason to expect much better.

McIlroy ran out of par saves late in the opening round at the BMW Championship and had to settle for a 3-under 67, still enough for the world's No. 1 player to share the lead with Jordan Spieth and Gary Woodland.

Cherry Hills, one of the shortest courses on the PGA Tour when factoring in the mile-high air, held up just fine.

"It's tricky. It really is," McIlroy said. "The altitude, we've had a couple of days to adjust to that. It's fine. But these greens have gotten so much firmer over the last 24 hours. I think that's what is giving the guys just a little trouble out there."

U.S. Open champion Martin Kaymer and Sergio Garcia were among those at 68, while Justin Rose wasted a fast start and was at 69. Phil Mickelson, who won the U.S. Amateur at Cherry Hills in 1990, opened with a 70.

Rory McIlroy GETTY IMAGES

"It reminds me of Augusta in the early '90s, where the course played very short but the greens were the defence," Mickelson said. "And the greens were very fast, and very firm, and it was very difficult to get the ball close."

Chiquita Classic. Canada's Hadwin leads first round

Canada's Adam Hadwin birdied the first six holes on the back nine and shot a course-record 9-under 63 on Thursday to take the first-round lead in the Chiquita Classic, the second of four events in the Web.com Tour Finals.

The 26-year-old Hadwin, the Chile Classic winner in March, made putts from 10-16 feet during the birdie run that ended with a two-putt par from 35 feet on the par-4 16th.

"My record was five before today," Hadwin said. "I think I've done it a couple of times playing for fun and stuff. At no point during that stretch did it cross my mind. I was just disappointed I left the seventh birdie putt short on 16 to keep it going. Par seems disappointing after six in a row."

Hadwin finished fourth on the Web.com Tour's regular-season money list to earn one of 25 PGA Tour cards. Those 25 players are competing against each other for PGA Tour priority, with regular-season earnings counting in their totals and the final leader getting a spot in The Players Championship.

Jays gets their first three-game sweep at Tampa

Pinch-hitter Colby Rasmus homered in the 10th inning and the Toronto Blue Jays earned their first three-game sweep at Tampa Bay by beating the Rays 1-0 on Thursday night.

Rasmus led off with a long drive into the right-field seats against Steve Geltz (0-1).

Tampa Bay had runners at first and third with none out, and the bases loaded with one out, in the ninth. But reliever Brett Cecil (2-3) worked out of the jam by striking out three in the inning. Casey Janssen got three outs for his 21st save.

Nishikori making Japanese fans proud

U.S. Open. Men's 10th seed faces top-ranked Djokovic in semifinals after back-to-back five-set victories

Kei Nishikori's run to the semifinals of the U.S. Open was hailed back home as a "win for all of Japan".

Nishikori became the first Japanese man to reach the U.S. Open semifinals in 96 years by outlasting third-seeded Stan Wawrinka of Switzerland 3-6, 7-5, 7-6 (7), 6-7 (5), 6-4 on Wednesday.

Japanese tennis fans woke up at dawn to watch the quarter-final and were rewarded.

"It was a spectacular win for all of Japan," said office worker Toru Miura.

"We haven't had a lot of success in men's tennis over the years."

The previous Japanese semifinalist at the U.S. Open was Ichiya Kumagae in 1918. No man from the country had made it to the final four at any major tournament since Jiri Satoh at Wimbledon in 1933.

"It's really impressive," Japan Tennis Association (JTA) director Masaru Uchiyama told Sports Hochi newspaper. "It was truly inspirational to watch as he came back after dropping the fourth set."

The 24-year-old Nishikori, the first Japanese player to be ranked in the ATP's top 10 after climbing to No. 9 in May, faces No. 1 Novak Djokovic on Saturday.

Wednesday's four-hour, 15-minute win over the Australian Open champion Wawrinka came a day after Nishikori defeated Milos Raonic in a fourth-round match that lasted more than four hours.

"Even though he was tired he fought hard to the end," said JTA director of strengthening and development Minoru Ueda. "Let's hope he can get another win."

From two sets down. Federer needs comeback to eliminate Monfils

Roger Federer reacts to a point in his match against Gael Monfils on Thursday night. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Roger Federer saved two match points while coming all the way back from a two-set deficit to beat Gael Monfils 4-6, 3-6, 6-4, 7-5, 6-2 on Thursday night and reach the U.S. Open semifinals for the first time since 2011.

Frustrated by Monfils' unpredictable style, flummoxed by the swirling wind and missing shots he normally makes, Federer twice was a single point from losing while down 5-4 in the fourth set.

But he got out of that hole, starting a five-game run that put the match in his control for the first time all evening. It helped that Monfils' quality of play dipped, including what wound up being a total of 10 double-faults.

This was the ninth time Federer has won a match after dropping the opening two sets.

Federer will take on Marin Cilic in the semifinals.

The 14th-seeded Cilic reached the second Grand Slam semifinal of his career, and first since 2010, by beating sixth-seeded Tomas Berdych 6-2, 6-4, 7-6 (4) earlier in the day.

Cilic missed last year's U.S. Open because of a doping suspension after testing positive for a banned stimulant. He said he ingested it unintentionally from a glucose tablet bought at a pharmacy. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Horoscopes by Sally Brompton

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Don't concern yourself with details this weekend. Besides, why should you exert yourself when it seems all your important needs have been taken care of?

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
The next few weeks will be special for you, and for those who are special to you. Even people you think of as rivals or enemies will be more amenable than usual.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Venus, planet of values, urges you to be a bit more understanding of someone who has let you down. Almost certainly they didn't mean to.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
The planets will bring you into conflict this weekend with someone you usually get along with. Everything will be OK if you resolve to get past it quickly.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
If you need to approach someone for financial assistance then do so this weekend, but don't automatically assume they know what it is you want.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Venus moves into your birth sign this weekend, boosting your confidence. You will be glowing with happiness over the next few days and others will feel good being near you.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You want to move up in the world, but try not to be too pushy over the next 48 hours or you could undo a lot of the good work you have done.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You cannot go on trying to achieve everything alone. With Venus moving into the friend area of your chart this weekend, making alliances will come easy.

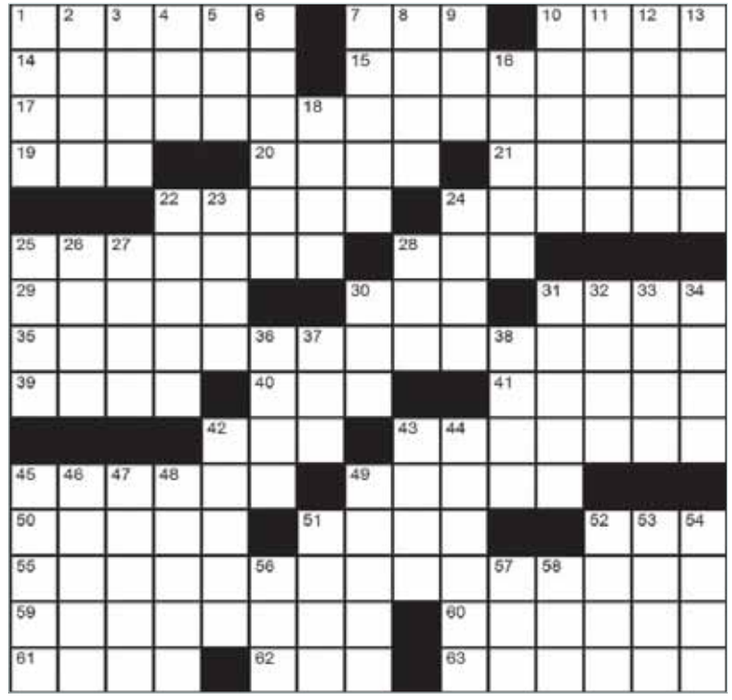

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you need to ask someone in a position of authority for a favour, this is one of the best times to approach them. They are in a charitable mood.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Travel is very much on your mind and it's quite likely you will be going somewhere distant or out of the ordinary. Contacts with foreigners are especially helpful at this time. You could even end up working abroad.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You should be feeling a lot better about your financial prospects now that values planet Venus is moving into the wealth area of your chart.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Love planet Venus in your opposite sign will bring relationship issues to the fore — in a nice way. If you're single, you may connect with someone compatible this weekend.

LEAVE IT TO JESUS

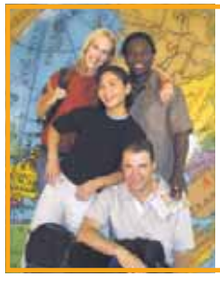

The problem that you choose to handle on your own persists, but solution is at sight when you leave it to Jesus. God said, "Do not fear or be dismayed because of this great multitude, for the battle is not yours but God's." (2 Chronicles 20:15). What is that issue before you, just leave it to Him and He will fix it.
